Nearly $12 million budget "kickoff" for Nome Public Schools FY12

By Lori Head

With all five board members present, and future NPS Superintendent Mike Brawner listening in telephonically, the Board began its work session on April 5 with parent Marcy Merrill expressing concerns about the Elementary School Principal also serving as the Special Education Director and the workload that combination involves. She also mentioned a kindergarten class estimated at 60 to enter this fall and the potentially large classes that might involve and asked the board to either insist on or look at an additional kindergarten class to reduce the class sizes.

Six NPS certified job openings

Bill Gartung, Human Resources Manager, then reported to the Board the six certified job openings and his plan to interview and hopefully hire as many positions before the Anchorage Job Fair because of the tight competition there. Board Member Barb Nickels asked if both the Board Member designee and alternate should be involved with the hiring committee, as this was the practice last year. After a discussion with other board members it was determined that only the one designee would be involved, Board Member Barb Amarok and not the alternate, Nickels.

Senate Bill 84

Nickels was asked about her recent trip to Juneau, where she and Superintendent Jon Wehde met with many Senators and House Representatives regarding Nome Public School's educational interests. Nickels reported that out of 318 bills and 70 days of session only two bills had passed. Nickels stated, "Most of the educational bills, the House has taken dollars away, the Senate has put them back in." She was hopeful Senate Bill 84, which includes an increase in the Base Student Allocation of $110, would be passed. The budget Wehde later presented to the board did not include the proposed increase, but the additional revenue of approximately $72,600 (based on a projected enrollment of 660 students next year) would be helpful.

FY12 Proposed General Fund Budget DRAFT

Wehde and Business Manager Cathi Wojtanek presented the Board with two FY12 Proposed General Fund Budget Drafts. One draft included a 50 percent medical insurance increase, the other a 56.36 percent medical insurance increase. They focused on the latter draft and described it as a "worst case" or "most stringent budget."

Wehde began, "What we want to talk about tonight is the realities of revenues, against known expenses, with decreases already on the board. It is a very difficult budget." To balance the budget, there were 10 percent decreases in Professional and Technical Services, Staff and Board Travel, Other Purchased Services and Supplies, Materials and Media for a savings of $48,347. Big dollars came in from the NPS Fund Balance at $250,000 and $100,000 from FY11 under budget savings and a request from the City for an additional $874,000 above the required 4 mill amount of $989,747.

Board members asked questions, several of which were deferred until Monday, April 11, when Wojtanek committed to have a final, detailed draft budget proposal available. Nickels had concerns over proposed cuts in Professional and Technical Services and Staff and Board Travel if the district was to remain aligned with the Strategic Plan goals yet to be accomplished. Wehde explained that the draft budget was fluid at this point

Updated Organizational Chart

An updated organizational chart was also shared with the board by Wehde which was pared down by two administrative positions; the attrition of the operations manager and dissolution of the full-time coordinator of curriculum and assessment. It replaced a teacher position at the Beltz Jr/Sr High level with a halftime coordinator of curriculum and assessment and half-time counselor position. Steve Gast, principal of NBHS explained, "We basically figured out a way to still service our kids; still provide the classes we need to provide, but to use one of those current positions as a counseling position, as opposed to a teaching position. So, we did not increase our personnel. We still are offering the same number of classes. We're actually increasing the number of classes with the seven-period day."

JROTC and Breakfast Program UNFUNDED for FY12

Other discussions during the budget presentation included the fact that JROTC is currently unfunded for FY12 and that funding by Nome Eskimo Community for our current breakfast program will end this May. Nickels asked Wehde to look into what would be involved to have a reimbursable, formal breakfast program funded by the State.

School lunches were also discussed briefly by the board as Wehde announced, "The cost of school lunches will be going up for those families not covered by the elements of free and reduced lunch." Nickels did mention a House Bill "in the work" that would fund an additional $.35 per lunch. Wehde acknowledged that if that didn't pass the board would be receiving information in May or June laying out a program of what the rising costs of lunches would be.

JROTC's "Letter of Concern"

As for JROTC, Wehde has been speaking with CEOs and CFOs in town for potential funding. He mentioned an Alaska Education Tax Credit program that allows businesses to make donations to a school district to fund vocational education, programs and facilities and receive significant state and federal tax benefits. He believes JROTC qualifies for this tax credit program. According to Wehde, a corporation could donate $100,000 and after tax savings, the net cost of the donation is estimated to be about $38,610.

He also referred to a "letter of concern" from the Department of the Army that has basically put the Nome JROTC Program "on notice" due to the atypical funding of it through annual corporation donations rather than the JROTC instructor's salaries as a part of the school's operating budget. A portion reads, "Although we applaud and appreciate the creativity and ingenuity used in getting the instructor's salaries funded throughout the years by sources outside of the school; using this approach always leads to uncertainty on whether the program and instructors will be maintained at the end of each school year." Wehde approximated the cost of the program at $180,000 (50 percent of that cost is funded by the Federal Government) which currently serves 30-35 students.

A public hearing for community comments on the Proposed FY12 Budget was scheduled for April 11, as well as two more board meetings, April 12 and 26, where questions and concerns would be addressed, priorities would be determined by the board with a final budget due May 1. Community members have an opportunity to address the board at the beginning of any regular meeting or work session of the school board and are encouraged to do so.

Nome's 6th graders go to college

By Lori HeadAll 45 of Nome Elementary School's 6th grade students piled into a bus headed off on April 8 for college. Isn't that a bit young, you ask? Not if it's in conjunction with the I'm Going To College Program coordinated locally by Kacey Miller, UAF Northwest Campus' Student Services Manager. The Alaska Commission on Postsecondary Education partners with the UA College Savings Plan and Northwest Education Loan Association to offer this opportunity to young students from across the state. Kacey explains that this is the second year it has taken place in Nome and the idea is to start young students thinking about college. Another important element to the program is understanding all the financial aid available to college students.

It was an all-day affair offering the young visitors a sampling of college life with six 25-minute hands-on classes and activities nursing, ceramics, including computer lab, library scavenger hunt, biology and a Bingo College Prep game. A lunch including sandwich, chips and juice from Subway was also provided to the future college students - it was an "All that and a bag of chips" day to be sure!

During the ceramics lab they were each given a 2 x 2 inch square of clay and guided by Tara Prosser as they created what they wanted or imagined. One student made a key to a drawer at home for which the original key had been lost. Another student, William Herzner, made a spoon. Towards the end he wanted to make another item, a butter knife. When told there wasn't enough time he responded, "I want to take a ceramics class here and I want to make silverware." Timothy James liked the Ceramics Room as he explained, "If you don't have money to buy stuff you can just make it.'

Kacey Miller played Bingo with the 6th graders as she handed out the boards and a pack of Smarties for markers. She'd ask questions that would lead to answers on their BINGO boards. When someone would give her the correct answer they would all check their boards to see if it was there. One question was long and had to do with Federal Aid. After no correct answers and puzzled looks, Kacey told them the answer had been mentioned in the question. Maria Pelkola quickly raised her hand, "Could you repeat the question please?" She may be ready for college already.

In the Emily Ivanoff Brown Library, Pam Hancock, UAF NWC's library assistant, held a scavenger hunt where students searched for a particular book. Some of the trickier assignments were in the Alaskana room where all the books on Alaska are housed. As the students searched for books they could be heard saying, "Found it!" or "This is fun!"

During the students' Biology class, Heikki Muhonen, of the High Latitude Range Management Department, shared a presentation on "Reindeer Herding in Scandinavia and Russia." As he taught about reindeer and their many uses he passed around reindeer antlers and a hide. Student Josh Cannon asked him if the antlers were "fake" because they were surprisingly light. The instructor smiled and reassured him of their authenticity.

With two classes left, it was on to Elluminate Live! (eLive) with faculty member Mike Rutledge. Mikey Scott enjoyed this section "because you got to talk to each other and draw with the computers." Each student sat behind a computer as the instructor explained that a lot of the classes he teaches are in the computer lab, "over distance" such as Shishmaref, Stebbins or Kaltag and Nome at the same time. During the class the students and teacher can communicate in real live time with each other via text and emoticons. Towards the end he computed a math equation with a stylus on the screen and then, with the few minutes remaining, allowed the students to take over the screen. They were drawing, writing notes, and erasing others' work on the one large screen at the front of the classroom all at the same time.

Hannah Alowa said she "liked learning how the nurses worked on the dummies." She was referring to the Nursing class taught by Bridgette Watkins, and four nursing students who "treated" several students as well as showed them the dummy who could imitate coughing, shortness of breath, groaning in pain, answer with "yes" or "no," and even sound like he was vomiting. "Kind of gross?" Bridgette queried, but the students thought it was "cool!" Sixth grader Polly Barr said she liked the nursing part a lot.

The experience was obviously beneficial. Josh Bourdon said that even though he already planned on going to college it was helpful "to see all the different classes you could take." Hannah Alowa said today would help her know "how it's going to be when I go to college." I'm Going to College participant Mikey Scott explained the value of the day as, "It showed me how it could be at college. How fun it could be."

After the students' "first day of college" they met back together and were given a free backpack, piggy bank and college handouts before they boarded the bus back to their other school, hopefully with a new or renewed sense of college as important, attainable and most importantly – possible.

An Open Letter to All Alaskans from ConocoPhillips

Our Commitment to Moving Alaska Forward

Dear Alaskans:

The oil industry in Alaska is at a crossroads. The amount of oil in the Trans Alaska Pipeline is declining at a faster rate than projected even a year ago. State and federal officials are, for the first time, talking openly about the challenges with TAPS low flow in light of the recent shut down of TAPS.

No other state's production has declined more than Alaska in the past eight years. But it doesn't have to be that way. The oil industry and the state of Alaska must work together now to put more oil in the pipeline and bridge the more than 10-year gap between now and when oil from offshore and other sources can hopefully refill TAPS.

Governor Parnell has introduced a bill, HB 110/SB 49, to reduce oil taxes in an effort to restart development and create new jobs. However, some have questioned the oil industry's commitment to Alaska.

In Alaska this week, ConocoPhillips reinforced that commitment to the state. If the business environment is changed, we at ConocoPhillips will do more to help bring Alaska's challenged oil to the market.

We will increase our drilling activity on the North Slope.

We will proactively pursue more North Slope projects that can move the needle on oil production while employing Alaskans and creating new opportunities for Alaska businesses.

We will work with BP and ExxonMobil to advance significant projects like Gas Partial Processing (GPP) and IPAD at Prudhoe Bay.

We will aggressively pursue more satellite developments at both Kuparuk and Alpine.

Our company believes Governor Parnell's goal of producing 1 million barrels of oil per day is a goal around which we can all unite.

At ConocoPhillips, we believe in the potential that Alaska has to offer. We have demonstrated our commitment to the environment by continuing to operate in the cleanest and safest way we can. We have shown a long history of investment, both human and financial, to bring the resources of this great state to the market. We have stood with many Alaska companies, including Alaska Native corporations, to build an oil and gas industry that has provided many jobs to Alaskans.

If the Legislature provides for an effective date of 2012, ConocoPhillips will do our part to accelerate new activity on the North Slope.

Alaska has tremendous resource potential, and we at ConocoPhillips have over 50 years in Alaska in solving technical and environmental challenges associated with oil development. We support improving the investment climate and believe changing oil taxes will lead to a better future with more production and jobs for Alaska families than the current path we are on.

Sincerely,

Trond-Erik Johansen

Risk factors for heart disease seen in teens

By Bob Lawrence, MD

A teenager with an elevated Body Mass Index at age 17 is at higher risk for coronary heart disease by age 40, according to a new study in the New England Journal of Medicine.

Researchers followed the medical status of 37,600 healthy teenage men to determine which of the young men were at risk of developing certain adult-type diseases like coronary heart disease.

The results show that men with a higher BMI at age 17 are over five times more likely to develop coronary heart disease in mid-life compared to teenagers with a lower BMI. BMI is calculated by dividing a person's weight in kilograms by the square of their height in meters.

This result is not altogether surprising. Obesity, defined as a BMI above 30, is associated with many chronic diseases in adulthood. It stands to reason that these problems might be seen in adolescents as well.

But the young men in this study were not obese. Their BMI measurements averaged 19 to 20 with a high end of 27, all in the accepted normal range. This means that young men with a BMI at the higher end of normal were at greater risk of developing coronary artery disease compared to their lighter peers.

This research is important for several reasons.

First it means that heart disease later in life may be predicted, and possibly averted, in children who are only mildly overweight, not just those who are obese. For this reason, doctors will likely pay closer attention to teenagers whose BMI falls in the higher range of normal, watching these patients for additional early signs of coronary heart disease.

Second, the research highlights the fact that coronary heart disease likely develops over a long period of time. Depending on lifestyle and diet, a teenager may already be developing atherosclerosis, the clogging of the arteries that precedes heart disease.

Parents and health care professionals can no longer feel satisfied with the idea that a teenager should change their diet and lifestyle because they might develop heart disease someday. The findings in this study show that many teenagers are developing coronary artery disease

The research is a reminder that prevention of cardiovascular disease should begin in childhood where young people can be taught how to make daily choices for good health. It is important not to foster an unhealthy focus on a given weight or body shape. Rather, children can learn to choose healthy options in diet and activity that naturally result in a healthy body. For example, a person can learn to enjoy a piece of fruit rather than chips, drink water instead of pop, or play outside rather than play video games.

The research shows that the small daily choices that result in a healthy body may make the difference between clean healthy coronary arteries and the heart-threatening clogged arteries of cardiovascular disease later in life.

Saying it Sincerely

By Rev. Julia Yoder Elmore On behalf of the Nome Ministerial Association

Last week I attended the Lutheran Spring Conference held in Nome and preached one night. The theme verse was "In this world you have tribulation, but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." John 16:33b. Indeed in this life we have tribulation. Jesus and the disciples faced trials and were about to face many more in the days ahead as Jesus prepared himself and his disciples for his own death. Transitions are not always easy and sometimes full of tribulation. Tribulation, however, was not the end for them. Jesus eventually died and left them, but he rose from the dead, conquering death and overcame the evil forces of the world.

Through our tribulations, it would be easy to allow the messiness of the world to consume us. We have tribulations when we have an illness that lingers on or addictions grab hold of us. We have tribulation when a loved one dies or when a family member no longer recognizes who we are or where they are.

Recently my family has experienced tribulation. My uncle fell twice in one night before my auntie could get up to help him. Further, my uncle is in the beginning stages of dementia. He has moments of frightful confusion over where he is. Knowing that he is going through this causes me great tribulation. My uncle and auntie are the most humble and Christ-like people I know. Why do they have to go through this tribulation? Why does my uncle have to lose his memory and slip away from us bit by bit?

The first night of Lutheran Conference worship, I went with a heavy heart, thinking about my uncle. The more the singing in both Inupiaq and in English, the more my heart felt lighter and lighter. At one point in the service, I realized that I was thinking about my uncle without crying. For at least the three days previous, I could not think or talk about him without crying. Many Elders and friends had cried with me those days.

Singing and hearing singing made me be of good cheer. I realized that this time of tribulation was not the end. Christ overcame the world and brought the hope of the future into the present. Although the kingdom of God will not be fully realized until Jesus comes again, we can see glimpses of the kingdom of God here on earth. The glimpse of the Kingdom of God I needed to experience that night was everybody singing and passing the peace!

We do indeed go through tribulation and by the grace of God, we have the hope that Jesus has overcome the world and that all will be well in the end. The tribulations we suffer in this world will be greatly overshadowed by simply being in the presence of the God when Christ comes again. Thanks be to God!

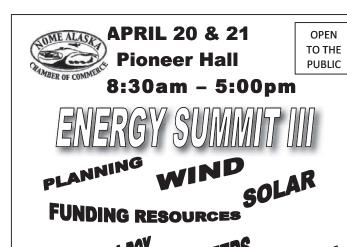

a teacher. It was hard for him to be away from his village at school. He carried a tattered dictionary around for years to help him decipher "textbook language." Paul earned his Bachelor of Arts degree in Elementary Education from the University of Alaska Fairbanks and went on to become one of the first Native Principals in Northwestern Alaska. He was privileged to receive the UAF Outstanding Alumnus Award for Community Service. He said with the support of his wife he was able to achieve these and many other accomplishments.

Paul taught school for many years for the Bering Strait School District at Savoonga and his home village of Shaktoolik where he was selected twice as Outstanding Educator. He spent summers as a commercial fisherman and started his own guiding service. After his retirement he enjoyed working for Cook Inlet Tribal Council as an Elementary Tutor.

His gift to us was the example he lived—to never give up when things get tough, to treat people kindly, and to enjoy life with humor.

Many family and friends fondly remember his silly sayings: "Hi, Sam." "Next month we can say next month ducks will come." Or answering the phone and saying, "Merry Christmas" in July.

No matter where life took Paul, he always enjoyed coming back home to Shaktoolik. Now as his life's journey has come to an end, we know he is happy to be back home.

Fisheries Safety Orientation Class May 2 - 11, 2011

On behalf of the NSEDC Board of Directors, the NSEDC EET Department is happy to announce a fisheries safety orientation class at the Alaska Vocational Technical Center in Seward, Alaska on May 2 - 11, 2011. The class is limited to ten participants with a deadline of April 20, 2011. In compliance with the U.S. Coast Guard Zero Tolerance Law, each trainee must pass a drug screen urinalysis and stay off the alcohol during training and employment working on our trawler, crabbers, and longliner vessels on the Bering Sea. #### Nome Planning Commission: Make haste slowly on Bypass Road

By Sandra L. Medearis

Nome's planning commission wants vehicles in Nome to roll more slowly for the cause of safety.

At their April 5 meeting, they voted to recommend a reduction of speed on the Bypass Road from 40 miles an hour to 25 miles an hour from Bob Blodgett Highway to East Front. The new speed limit would also match up with Little Creek Road past the AC Store. Cars entering from the new hospital due for completion in fall 2013 will bring a lot more traffic in addition to taxi cabs, trucks and snow removal trucks on a road that has no provision for pedestrian travel. The Nome Common Council by ordinance can set speed limits within the town.

Because the Bypass Road goes across the north side of town and passes the Nome Elementary School area on the way to meet East Front Street, with a well-used turn south at N Street, the planning panel is also recommending placement of a fourway stop at N Street and Seventh Avenue. There was support also for a stop sign at Sixth Avenue and G

mented that patrolling for speeders cost more than the gas and pollution issues

Nonetheless, Brown voted for the speed control measures. Commissioners reminded him that he could throw up a road block when the issues come up for approval at the Nome Common Council where he is also a member.

Spring snowstorm blows through records

By Sandra L. Medearis

Folks thought it must be a record or close to one-a winter snow dump with high winds well into April.

Not so, Jerry Steiger, National Weather Service said. We have most final winter storms in March, but a last meteorological hurrah in April is not unusual, he said. This hurrah came two-and-a-half weeks after the calendar announced spring.

Last week's storm, peaking at mid-morning Thursday, April 7 did set a record—a double record. The 6.7 inches of snow that fell on Nome beat the old record of 5.4 inches set on April 7, 1945. And then, and then—the same 6.7 inches beat the 6.3 inches that fell on April 21, 1961. That makes April 7 the biggest snow day ever in April, going back 105

Notifications of closures came over the community e-mail shortly after 5 a.m. Thursday, beginning with Nome Preschool. Then similar messages from other schools, businesses and public agencies came cascading over Nome Announce.

The wind picked up at 10 p.m. Wednesday night, April 6, right on time, as predicted by NWS. By 2 a.m. Thursday, the wind was getting truckloads of snow airborne and mixing it with freshly falling snow in opaque sheets, blocking out sight of houses next door.

For folks with maps, the NWS described what happened thus: "A major storm southwest of Saint Matthew Island early this morning [April 7] will move to near Dall Point by early Friday morning. The storm will bring heavy snow to the southern Seward Peninsula coast today. Additional snow amounts of 5 to 7 inches are expected today with another 2 to 3 inches tonight. Storm total amounts will be as much as 12 inches." And so it did.

A fear upheld by a NWS special warning that buckling ice would shove aboard some village communities-most notably seaside Shishmaref—did not materialize. Still, the NWS was predicting last Friday afternoon that large areas of shore-fast ice could become unstable and break away from coasts with north-facing coasts subject to ice scouring.

The agency warned that travel over the ice could be dangerous.

However, Friday morning when snow was still sifting down, but the brunt of the storm had passed, Steiger did say that crab pots would best be pulled and not at the edge of shore-bound ice that could break off. We are keeping watch on that and will be through the weekend," he

On Friday, state crews were ridding Nome's main roads of humongous piles of snow pushed up to the centerlines by graders. Imagine will carry out the following activities: (1) Present information learned from NOM-00146 to the general public in Nome before the expiration of the MOA; (2) prepare a summary of information learned from NOM-00146 in such a manner that the manuscript can be used by Nome teachers to present to students in grades 5-12; (3) present information learned from NOM-00146 to a conference of peers such as the annual meeting of the Society for American Anthropology, the annual meeting of the Alaska Anthropological Assn., or an equivalent venue; and (4) submit an article about NOM-00146 for publication in a peer-reviewed journal.

The MOA also stipulates a process for terminating the agreement, which will remain in effect until it is terminated or until five years after it becomes effective.

"It's been a long time coming," said Councilwoman Mary Knodel after the council approved the MOA.

Penalties made enforceable

The council adopted an ordinance amending sections of the Nome Code of Ordinances containing penalty provisions for violations by adding a reference to the state surcharge provision required under Alaska Statue 12.55.039. City Manager Josie Bahnke explained the need for the action in a memorandum to the council.

"Last year the City issued two citations to a citizen for building permit violations (failure to obtain moving and building permits)," Bahnke wrote. "The citation was forwarded to the Alaska Court System and they declined to accept the citation due to the lack of reference in the Nome Code (NCO 5.10.050 (a)) to a penalty provision and any surcharge required to be imposed by Alaska Statute 12.55.039. Without quirement, the citations are unenforceable in court.

"Accordingly, I worked with the City Attorney to amend NCO 5.12.120 (a) and NCO 1.10.020, general violation provision, to include language referencing the surcharge," Bahnke continued. "I also reviewed all other penalty provisions of the NCO to determine if additional references to state surcharge provisions need to be included. This led to inclusion of language for a third section in the NCO regarding Chapter 10.40—Helmets.

Section 10.40.010 requires all drivers of motorcycles, motorscooters, all-terrain vehicles and snowmachines under the age of 18, and all passengers to wear crash helmets approved by the Alaska Dept. of Transportation when utilizing the vehicles within city limits. The section providing penalties for violations of Section 10.40.10, as amended by the council reads:

"10.40.020 Violation-Penalty. Penalties for violations of this chapter are levied against the parent or legal guardian of the minor and are a $50 fine for the first offense, a $75 fine for the second offense and a $150 fine for the third and subsequent offenses, plus any surcharge required to be imposed for each violation by AS 12.55.039."

Taxi license transfer

The council approved a reqest from Steven W. Longley, dba E-Z Enterprises, to transfer one of this three taxi licenses to Jason M. Song, dba Mr. Kab 1, after determing that Longley has paid for his three 2011 taxi licenses and is current in his monthly sales tax remittance and that Song also is current in his monthly sales tax remittance.

Council members present at the meeting in addition to Knodel were Randy Pomeranz, Josie Stiles and Jim West, Jr. Mayor Denise Michels attended by teleconference. Councilmen Stan Andersen and Jerald Brown were absent.

health services, like cervical and breast cancer screening, birth control and cholesterol checks.

Both Alaska Senators Mark Begich and Lisa Murkowski voted for the measure. Alaskan Congressman Don Young has signed a letter to all other House Members, pledging support for the efforts of House speaker John Boehner to seek the largest possible spending reductions while still keeping the government open and operating.

The Senate is likely to approve the deal this week, said Begich. The budget reflects the biggest cut in federal spending since World War II. "And there is no question that Alaska, like every state, will feel these cuts," wrote Begich in this week's newsletter. A government shutdown would have affected military construction, new FHA loan applications, new social security applicants, the National Park Service, the Small Business Administration would have not been able to process loans and many of the 17,000 federal employees in Alaska would have been furloughed. He said his office, all except two of his staff would've been ordered to stay home,

The resolution's reductions affect mostly transportation projects:

• Funding cuts for the Transportation Planning, Research, and Development account from $16.1 million in FY 2010 to $9.8 million.

- Funding cuts for the Federal Aviation Administration's facilities and equipment account by $8.7 million from the FY 2010 level.
- Cuts to the Federal Aviation Administration's Research, Engineering and Development account by $3.5 million.
- · Spending reductions for High Speed and Intercity Passenger Rail to $1 billion, a reduction of $1.5 billion from FY10.
- · Reductions to the Federal Railroad Administration's Research and Development account to $35.1 mil-
- · Cuts to Transit New Starts to $1.72 billion, $280 million below the FY 2010 level.
- Cuts for the Transit Research and University Research Centers Program to $64.2 million.
- Public Housing Operating Fund was reduced to $4.6 billion.
- Funds for HUD's Community Development Fund, including the Community Development Block Grant were cut by $220 million. The block grant formula amount remains the same as in FY10, but the provision eliminates funding for Economic Development Initiative and Neighborhood Initiative grants, as well as University Communities

NPS faces rising cost of health insurance

Draft budget based on 56.36% health insurance increase

By Lori Head

Budget-breaking bad news from Aetna warning Nome Public School's business manager Cathi Wojtanek of potential increases in the district's health insurance of up to 56.36 percent was received on April 4, one week prior to the budget's public hearing and detailed presentation. Wojtanek does point out that it was only a warning that it "might happen." She knows there will be an increase, but the amount is uncertain. What this looks like on paper, worst case, is a difference in benefit costs of $307,668 from FY11 to FY12. Superintendent Jon Wehde added that an informal poll had taken place among other school districts and Nome was in the "higher end of insurance increases." He said some were lower, in the 20-30 percent increase range. Board member Barb Nickels encouraged Wojtanek "to start shopping around now and not wait around to find out," as the policy does sunset on June 30 and another company may provide potential savings. Wehde shared with the board that "the city manager indicated her willingness to do a study to see if, in fact, we should be in with the city, as a subsidiary of the city. There is an ability for that to be considered." Wehde is hopeful that the board will have significantly more information before the final budget is approved.

Stimulus funding

Jon Berkeley, director of Federal Programs, walked the board through positions funded through either ARRA (American Recovery and Reinvestment Act) or SFSF (State Fiscal Stabilization Fund) money and explained how they would instead be funded in FY12. He reported that the district was in year two of two for stimulus money.

"That means that we need to have this money spent out by the end of the fiscal year and that there will be no other funding for that." Berkeley said the district was keeping the FTEs (full time employees), "more or less," that were created by the stimulus funding, at the classroom and building levels. Berkeley concluded, "with federal programs picking up the slack that stimulus money is now gone. I think it's a fairly stable plan. It's a fairly stable budget that we can kind of bank on for years to come.'

FY12's proposed budget is balanced with $250,000 coming from the general fund. That's a substantial amount of money considering in

Shismaref to vote in District 39 under proposed plan

The Alaska Redistricting Board adopted draft redistricting plans to put before the public for comment before final adoption. Hearings will be held statewide.

noon at Nome City Hall in Council Chambers, followed by a session in Kotzebue from 3 p.m. to 5 p.m. in Northwest Arctic Borough Assembly

The ARB has proposed two draft plans that differ only in the configuration of two Senate districts. The draft brings House districts 39 (Rep. Neal Foster) and 40 (Rep. Reggie Joule), containing Nome and Kotzebue, close to the ideal district population of 17.755, with District 40 having only two people more than District 39. The plan keeps the two districts in line with the law allowing no more than a five percent difference in population by five percent plus or minus and only after a creditable effort to even up the districts. The ideal House district population, based on the one person, one vote law-everyone's vote having equal

Governor calls legislators to special session

By Diana Haecker

For the first time in Alaska's history, a governor had to adjourn the Legislature as the House and the Senate arrived at an impasse over the capital budget bill. On Sunday night the Senate president Gary Stevens (R- Kodiak) sent a letter to Governor

Sean Parnell requesting that the governor adjourn the session because the Senate and the House are in disagreement over the time and date of adjournment. "Despite our best efforts, the house has refused to provide us with an operating budget, which is the primary duty of the legislature, making this request necessary," wrote Stevens in the letter signed by all 16 Senate majority caucus members.

At the same time, the House passed a resolution that certified the impasse and asked the governor to continued on page 4

By Senator Donald Olson Coastal Zone Update

The Alaska Coastal Management Plan (ACMP) is going to be one of the last issues the Legislature deals with this session – in fact, it could be the last bill passed. After five years of trying to reform the program to allow for meaningful local input, we are almost there. HB 106 and SB 45 includes amendments establishing an Alaska Coastal Policy Board and allow for further involvement at the local levels. are both in their respective body's finance committees. It looks like HB 106 will be the vehicle for both.

Negotiations are ongoing, and the details of the bills may change, but I would like to assure my constituents that I will insist on:

• Reinstating the Coastal Policy Board to give the coastal districts a voice at the table

- Eliminating the costly and timeconsuming "designated area require-
- Ensuring that the coastal districts can create enforceable policies that fill in the gaps not addressed by federal or state law
- Keeping the "DEC carve-out."

I'd like to mention that while I am pro-development to create jobs and get more throughput in the pipeline, I also believe that any development on our coast needs to be environmentally responsible and respectful of our accustomed way of life. I remain hopeful the legislature will pass a bill this session the Governor is willing to sign.

It's About Time

At long, at last break-up is here. Well, we hope it is here. The icy clutches of old man winter are losing their grip. It won't be long till the cranes and swans return and we sincerely hope they don't break their long necks trying to land on our frozen lakes and ponds. Folks in the know seem to think the ice will be around for a while.

While the tripod at Nenana waits to topple and make someone's wallet a bit thicker, many Alaskans keep an eye on the time they selected for the official tipping. Since the popularity of the Nenana Ice Classic is such a big event, one wonders why more communities haven't copied the game. We could have one in Nome. Why not dangle a tripod from the Snake River Bridge? How about sinking Christmas trees on the Bering Sea Golf Course? What about a totem pole in the Turning Basin? We could also take wagers on when the Snow Dump will disappear. What about a contest to see who has the biggest street lake in front of their house? When will the famous harbinger of spring, the "green slime" appear on Steadman? We could have pothole-iumping contests. We could also have a statewide game on how many bills the legislature will pass.

There are lots of things to contemplate while doing an imitation of Rumplestiltskin with one leg deep in rotting snow. Let's hope this breakup goes in a hurry with minimal flooding and a good spring cleaning. Here's to springtime in Alaska. -N.L.M.-

very end. The operating budget (HB 108 and HB 109) has passed both the Senate and House, but since the budget that passed out of each body was not the same, a conference committee has been appointed to settle The conference the differences. committee is expected to meet soon to resolve those differences. It is usually done over three meetings. The operating budget also includes an appropriation of $400 million to the Power Cost Equalization (PCE) Endowment Fund, which will help to secure payments to/for individuals to offset the high energy costs in rural Alaska. The capital budget (SB 46) is still in the early stages as only one version has thus far been released in the Senate. Another version, called a committee substitute or "CS", is expected before being passed out of Senate Finance. Following that, it will go to the Senate floor before being transmitted to the House where it will be heard in House Finance, and will likely be amended by releasing another CS, before finally going to the House floor. The final capital budget is expected to be about $3 billion dollars, including additions to savings and reserves. Obviously this is a very tight time frame for passage with only 3 more days left in the session. My office will be sending lists of what ends up passing out of the Legislature for the capital budget to the communities in our district, hopefully within a few days of the dust settling. Until then, you can keep track by using the Legislature's system of tracking bills, "BASIS" online http://www.legis.state.ak.us/basis/sta rt.asp and by watching Gavel to Gavel on public TV. Stay tuned.

Alaska Native Language Preservation Council Bill Introduced

I recently introduced a bill to establish an Alaska Native Language Preservation Council in efforts to preserve Native languages throughout the state. No legislation has been introduced in the past to create such a council. My staff will continue working on this implementation idea during interim with the Office of the Governor. If it passes next session, we're hoping the Alaska Native Language Preservation Council will oversee cost effective programs and pilot projects designed to preserve Alaska Native languages. Alaska Native Languages, in most cases, are the critical components in sustenance of indigenous tribes across the state. I'm hoping the Alaska State Legislature will consider supporting my efforts to establish an Alaska Native Preservation Council.

Begich proposes OCS coordinator

In an effort to speed up resource development in Alaska, US Senator Mark Begich proposed to create a position for a federal coordinator for the Arctic Outer Continental Shelf. Begich said such a coordinator would help remove roadblocks halting development in the region and to work with all permitting agencies to streamline development. Oil and gas industry officials like Pete Slaiby, vice president of Shell Alaska: Geoffrey Haddad, vice president, exploration and land for ConocoPhillips Alaska; and Tom Malone, president of the Resource Development Council were present when Begich announced the legislation at the Resource Development Council in Anchorage on Monday. Begich's bill would create a lease and permit coordination office for the Alaska Region's OCS. In addition to coordinating federal agencies' permitting in the OCS, the legislation would more quickly resolve litigation over the permits by narrowing appeal periods and moving jurisdiction to the federal district court in Washington, DC.

US Congress passes resolution for 2011 budget

After a last minute avoidance of government shut down last week, Congress passed a continuing resolution that funds the federal government for the remainder of the fiscal year 2011. The resolution cut $40 billion from last year's funding level. Spending cuts include $1.5 billion from the EPA budget, $127 million from the National Park Service budget, eliminates funding of construction of new federal buildings to the tune of $812 million, among other things. It fully funds a military pay raise and increases funding to speed up the pace of offshore oil and gas drilling permits; and increases funding for veteran's health care services.

Legislature passes bills in last days of session

A flurry of bills passed the legislature and made their way to the governor's desk for his signature: A bill keeping on board a state coordinator dealing with invasive species, a bill that declared the fourth Saturday of July each year as Ted Stevens Day, a bill state flag and a bill classifying K2 or Spice - synthetic cannabiods- as controlled substances. A bill passed to fund high school vocational and technical instruction for public schools, and that included $11.7 million to Alaska school districts for the purpose of strengthening high school vocational education programs. Passed out of the House is a bill that funds this year's performance scholarships. However, rural legislators didn't want to fully fund a $400 million endowment until certain class requirements are fixed so that rural students have an equal chance. On the last day of the regular session, the Senate passed eight bills, including the extension of the regulatory commission, extending the ABC board and amending that felons can't serve on state boards. The House also passed a bill that beefs up Alaska's stalking statutes and increases the penalties for online enticement of a child. It also prohibits electronic distribution of explicit images of children. A bill dealing with the eligibility expansion of the Denali Kid-Care program was defeated in the Senate, but was up for reconsideration and now has to wait one year before it comes up again. Also a bill to extend the Alaska film tax credit has not been advanced and will likely come back in

International studies find Arctic coasts retreating

Two studies conducted by a consortium of international scientists came to the conclusion that arctic regions react to climate change with increased erosion and loss of land by 1.6 feet per year.

They investigated more than 62.000 miles of coastline and found that changes are particularly dramatic in the Laptev, East Siberian and Beaufort Seas, where coastal erosion rates reach more than 8 yards per year. More than 30 scientists from 10 countries were involved in preparing the 170-page status report entitled State of the Arctic Coast 2010. The study was initiated and coordinated by the International Arctic Sciproject Land-Ocean Interactions in the Coastal Zone, the International Permafrost Association and the Arctic Monitoring and Assessment Program working group of the Arctic Council.

Youth leaders meet for the prevention of tobacco use

On February 11-12, the youth group coalition AkTAI hosted its 3rd annual youth leadership summit at the BP Energy Center in Anchorage. More than 30 youth from all corners of the state met to plan how they can raise awareness to counteract the tobacco industry's efforts in their community.

Representing Nome and Teens Against Tobacco Use, peer leaders Jacob Martin and Teresa Trigg attended the summit.

"Every eight seconds somebody dies from tobacco use. That's 7 to 8 people every minute. Nome's population would vanish in roughly half a day by those statistics." says Teresa Trigg and Jacob Martin. We're involved in TATU to help increase prevention efforts for today's youth and encourage a tobacco-free lifestyle. We don't want Nome to disappear, or the students to suffer from an addictive substance.

"We attended the Summit to learn the hazards of tobacco, tactics to combat the tobacco company's ad campaigns, how to educate the public and our peers, and glean ideas for media projects we can apply in our home community of Nome," they added.

Although the students are disheartened by the statistics of tobacco use in the community, they are motivated and excited to apply their new education for advocacy efforts. "The public never listens to something said a thousand times or read a poster that has been posted thousands of times. But if you do something unconventional to capture their interest, they will pay attention and learn from what you are saying. We want to use these 'Guerilla Marketing' methods and tactics to inform the public, especially the youth, about the hazards of tobacco use," added Jacob.

TATU is a local anti-tobacco youth group of Nome Beltz high school students that received a grant from AkTAI for tobacco-prevention efforts. They meet weekly at Nome Beltz and are currently planning a dance and video PSAs as a part of their efforts to raise awareness about tobacco weight-derives from dividing the state's new population figure 710, 200, by 40 districts. This draft plan gives District 39 a population of 16,951 and District 40 a population of 16,953 people, making both districts about 4.5 percent short of the ideal number. Notably, shifting Shishmaref from District 40 to District 39 helped correct an imbalance in the number of people in the two districts. Districts 39 and 40 make up Senate District T, represented by Sen. Donny Olson.

Before the redistricting adjustment draft, District 39 was 2,113 people (11.90 percent) short of the idea number. District 40, Kotzebue, Rep. Reggie Joule-D, was short 239 (1.35 percent).

To comply with the Voting Rights Act, the board turned its attention first to rural Alaska intending to assure nine Alaska Native influence districts to avoid running afoul of the Act's language against retrogression. Retrogression would exist if the new districts weakened minority voting strength compared to the previous districting plan. Districts 39 and 40 are among the Alaska Native influence districts.

"The Board worked hard in an open manner to build draft plans that protect Alaska Native voting rights while providing fair and equal legislative representation for all Alaskans," John Torgerson, ARB chair said in a statement.

The Alaska State Constitution gave the Board 30 days to develop a plan after receiving the official 2010 Census on March 15. The state must redraw the districts every 10 years to adjust for population changes and shifts. The Board began daily sessions to work out draft plans on April 4 following hearings in seven cities followed by a statewide teleconference to collect comment on March

On April 14, the clock started giving the ARB 60 days to adopt a final plan. A statewide teleconferenced hearing on May 6 will end the public comment process. Those interested in testifying can attend at the Legislative Information Office via the east entrance of the State Building on Front Street from 9 a.m. to noon and from 2 p.m. to 6 p.m.

end the first session of the 27th legislature. Parnell adjourned the session at 10:48 p.m. and then at 10:51 p.m. on Sunday night, he issued a proclamation that called both chambers into a special session. Parnell blasted the Senate saying that its majority is "cavalierly blowing" through the voter approved 90-day session limit, "pretending it was a suggestion and not the law.

'I can think of no more important moment than this for a governor to stand up and invoke the people's constitutional grant of authority to adjourn a legislature when one body has made it known they don't intend to keep the 90 day session limit," said Parnell.

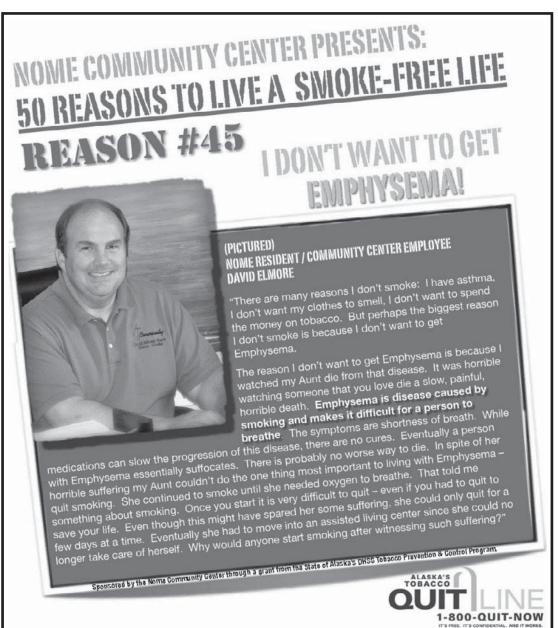

Voters in 2006 shortened the legislative session to 90 days, but per the constitution, the legislature has up to 120 days to be in session. A special session can last up to 30 days. In his proclamation, the governor told the legislature to consider 10 essential bills that deal with the capital, operating, supplemental and mental health budgets, coastal zone management, the Susitna River hydro project, funding the scholarship endowment, education funding and the extension of the Regulatory Commission of Alaska and other boards and commissions.

In a press conference, Senator Lyman Hoffman (D-Bethel) said, "I think, in talking with the governor, I hope that we get back to the table, start working on what's required here, which is the operating budget and discuss the other items that are still available for consideration." These "items" do not include the controversial oil tax reduction bill that has been the center of controversy. This session saw a division between the two chambers of the legislature as the House aligned with the governor on the oil tax issue. The House passed the oil production tax reduction bill pushed by Parnell, while the Senate balked at giving away an estimated $2 billion in oil tax revenue while there was no commitment from the oil industry to invest more money on exploration or drilling activities.

Nome Representative Neal Foster said that in the end, the reason for the legislative impasse was the budget. Usually, the House starts working on the operating budget while the capital budget goes to the Senate. "The issue was that the Senate proposed a $2.9 billion capital spending budget and with the governor saying that he wanted to hold the line to last year's budget under $2.8 billion, the House would have not been able to add more projects," Foster told The Nome Nugget. Two other points widened the gap between Senate and House. The Senate placed a poison bill in the capital spending bill that would bind all energy projects together so that the governor cannot line-item veto energy projects. With this political move, Senators reacted to Parnell's threat to veto projects if the oil tax reduction bill would not go through. The second point was that the Senate included language that coupled $100 million the governor wanted for road maintenance projects to the improbability that oil prices go up to $150 a barrel.

The Legislature started to work again on bills in the first special session on Monday.

Nome Elementary Reading SWAT team idea introduced

By Lori Head

On the heels of the prior night's public hearing of the FY12 proposed general budget, Nome Public School Board members held their regular meeting with notable absences of Board President Gloria Karmun, Superintendent Jon Wehde and Business Manager Cathi Wojtanek. The latter two were ill and board member Barb Amarok, acting chair, excused Karmun.

Kowchee and Oquilluk – March Students of the Month

Steve Gast, Nome Beltz Jr/Sr High principal announced Chase Kowchee as the Junior High Student of the Month. Chase was selected because he shows outstanding, positive character — every day. He helps, often, with tasks without having to be asked. He exhibits a model attitude for other students to follow. Janet Oquilluk was selected for the Senior High. Caleb Weaver, NBHS teacher, explained that Janet impressed him with her work on a Muktuk to Muktuk game as part of a Native American literature project. Janet played basketball this year for NBHS and plans to join the Navy after graduation.

Aides, technology and Reading 90 Program

Three community members addressed the board during Hearing of Delegations/Individuals. Ruth Weiss asked that they hire more aides, especially for the 5th and 6th grades. According to Weiss, there is currently one aide for the 1st and 2nd grades, or one aide for six teachers. She also encouraged them to raise the pay for aides, citing turnover, especially with special education aides, as one negative symptom. Sandi Keller, Nome Elementary School first grade teacher, seconded Weiss' suggestions and added that she supports the technology budget, which includes funding of Promethean boards. Nancy Mendenhall, the final community member, commended the board on the reading program recently initiated and expressed support for preschool programs as tremendous for reading readiness. Testing

Gast depicted the high school as tremendously busy with events and testing. He thanked Janeen Sullivan, coordinator of Curriculum and Assessment, for "Yeoman's work" of organizing the testing at all the sites. NYO goes virtual Regarding events, Native Youth Olympics recently held their first virtual meet with another school from their separate gyms, linked by Facebook to keep track of where distances or kicks were and who was winning. Another NYO meet is planned for April 15 – 16 with a combination of hosting a team and connecting with at least one other team virtually.

NES new hires

Nome Elementary School principal Dave Keller reported that Janet Balice, a veteran early elementary education teacher will be joining the ranks of kindergarten teachers this fall. Also, Susan Rand will assume the position of Special Education Speech/Language teacher. Lip Synch Contest a huge hit

The 56ers (5th and 6th graders at NES) "performed to a packed house" last month in a Lip Synch Contest organized by Mrs. Thrun and Mrs. Marvin. He hopes to see this event

again in future years. Student involvement with parentteacher conferences

Keller was pleased with data indicating a higher percentage of student involvement in parent-teacher conferences. "In the fall, students attended at a rate of 12 percent, compared to the spring involvement of 48 percent."

Student retentions

Keller then informed the board that this is the time of year when student retentions are under consideration. Board member Barb Amarok expressed her appreciation for his "thorough and factual" article regarding this sensitive subject in the Wolverine Gazette, a monthly newsletter sent home to parents. Keller emphasized that the students' best interest are the priority when making this "serious decision."

Reading SWAT Team

NES has a scheduling committee that is "preparing a variety of scenarios" following the Kennewick model which has reading blocks scheduled at different times in different grades. Keller said, "This allows what Keller calls a "Reading SWAT Team," or personnel, to be brought into the reading support system. This team includes paraprofessionals, as well as others. He explains, "Potentially, we have eight staff members that could be added to the Reading SWAT Team for an hour reading block, for every grade. That's powerful!" Board member Nickels expressed concern of how this would affect the balance of aide support at the individual grade level pods, as they became a part of the Reading SWAT Team.

Keller stated, "We're completely reframing the way we think about pod aides. So what I am suggesting is that we no longer think about a first/second grade pod aide, a third grade pod aide, a fourth grade pod aide. We think about instructional support staff."

JROTC

Nickels posed the question "Does this board want to put the $85,000 for the Junior ROTC program back in the budget by utilizing $85,000 of the $100,000 from the CIP line that was originally in that budget?" Discussion regarding the JROTC program and whether it should be placed the last eight years, the difference between the beginning and end fund balance of a fiscal year has not decreased more than $37,502 (FY07) and actually has increased by as much as $315,137 (FY07). If approved, FY12's general fund balance will drop from $1,697,328 to $1,447,328.

JROTC

Master Sergeant Retired Kevin Knowlton addressed the board and provided them with an additional handout to educate them of the Junior Reserve Officer Training Corps program and its benefits. According to the handout, its mission is "To Motivate Young People to Be Better Citizens." It is a four-year, 21st century curriculum that builds upon each previous year. Year one the students learn about citizenship in action, year two about wellness, fitness, and first aid, year three involves planning and execution of events and the final year has the cadets leading other cadets. He also pointed out that he is the custodian of over $150,000 worth of federal government property, which includes computers and a Smart Board.

The JROTC program has been funded for three years now outside of the NPS operating budget through special revenues. The Department of the Army has sent a letter to NPS expressing concerns about this method of funding and the board is currently discussing options, including moving it back into the operating budget. Breakfast Program

Board member Betsy Brennan asked about the Breakfast Program. Wehde and Wojtanek shared that if funding wasn't received in the form of a donation, there was a possibility that unallocated funds from money the district receives through Medicaid administration could cover the cost of a $10,000 breakfast program. Base Student Allocation (BSA)

On a positive note, according to Wehde SB 84 and SB 97 are both "right there at the front of the battle," and each could "generate more good news" for the BSA and the budget.

Wehde reminded the board that this proposed budget is a "living document" or a "point in time" until approved and submitted to the Nome Common Council. The Nome Board of Education is scheduled to meet again on April 26 to adopt the FY12 Budget.

Why Bertholf matters to Alaska

By Rear Admiral Christopher C. Colvin

The U.S. Coast Guard Cutter Bertholf stopped into the State Capitol for a brief port visit earlier this month. It was the first Alaskan port visit for this new class of ship that will become critically important to Alaska. Symbolic of its importance, Governor Parnell went aboard and graciously thanked the crew for their service to Alaska and the Nation.

The Bertholf was named after the first "Commandant" of the Coast Guard, Commodore Ellsworth Price Bertholf, who led the Coast Guard from 1911-1919.

Of course, Coast Guard cutters patrolled Alaska long before Bertholf's time as commandant. After the Senate ratified the treaty-purchase of Alaska from Russia on April 9, 1867, the Cutter Lincoln was dispatched north to carry the United States Flag and first U.S. agent to Sitka.

Bertholf is famous for his participation in the Alaskan Overland Expedition as a junior officer aboard Revenue Cutter Bear in 1897.

The Overland Expedition began when the White House received word that eight whaling ships and crews were trapped in heavy ice above Point Barrow, Alaska.

President McKinley directed the famous Revenue Cutter Bear to head north to rescue the sailors.

Unfortunately, due to the lateness of the season, the Bear became stymied by heavy ice in December near Nunivak Island.

Lieutenants Jarvis, Bertholf and the ship's surgeon Dr. Samuel Call volunteered to forge ahead and attempt to rescue the sailors.

Disembarking Bear, the intrepid trio raced north 1,500 miles by dogsled, in the dead of the arctic winter, herding 300 reindeer.

In March of 1898 they arrived on scene and saved 265 starving sailors.

The rescue was followed closely by media throughout the United States. Congress presented Bertholf, Jarvis and Call specially minted gold medals commemorating their remarkable feat.

Aptly named for a ship expected to routinely patrol Alaskan waters the Seventeenth Coast Guard District looks forward to seeing how well Bertholf will perform in the extreme weather and vast distances of the challenging Alaskan maritime operating environment.

Eight new, 418 foot Bertholf class cutters are planned to be built to replace the 12 aging Hamilton class cutters that served Alaska so well for so many years.

When the cruise ship Prinsendam sank in the Gulf of Alaska in 1980, it was the Hamilton class cutters Bouth- well and Mellon that responded to rescue 520 passengers and crew.

When the oil tanker Exxon Valdez ran aground in Prince William Sound in 1989, it was the Hamilton class cutter Rush that provided seaborne and airborne command and control.

When the fishing vessel Alaska Ranger sank far out in the Aleutians in 2008, it was the Hamilton class cutter Munro that responded and rescued 20 of 42 surviving crewmembers.

Just this past February when the fishing vessel Terrigail was driven aground in heavy surf north of Unalaska Island, it was the Hamilton class cutter Morganthau that responded and rescued all five crewmembers.

And in February, Hamilton said goodbye to Juneau and Alaska, making her last Alaskan port call in the state capitol before heading south to be decommissioned.

Not only did Hamilton class cutters conduct major rescues and serve prominently in major events in Alaska, the Hamilton class cutters ushered in a new era of fisheries management in 1976 known as the Magnuson Stevens Fisheries Conservation Management Act.

These 378 foot cutters enforced the FCMA and helped preserve the world's largest, most sustainable biomass in the Bering Sea and Gulf of Alaska. This was at a time in the late-1970s and early-1980s when foreign fishing vessels were ruthlessly vacuuming the Bering Sea clean of fish.

What remarkable service Hamilton class cutters have provided to Alaska and the Nation.

Their day job was to help maintain the Bering Sea and Gulf of Alaska fisheries biomass; the model of fisheries sustainability for the world.

Their night job was responding to and making incredible rescues in horrendous weather conditions long before Deadliest Catch became a household name.

Hamilton class cutters have returned the lives of many Alaskans that would otherwise have been lost to the sea and helped sustain the remarkable Alaskan fisheries industry that feeds much of the nation and the world.

Unfortunately, when fish are gone they seem to be gone forever, as demonstrated by the results of various nations overfishing the unpatrolled, unregulated, international "donut" area of the central Bering Sea.

In the adjacent United States Exclusive Economic Zone, the regulated, sustainable fisheries industry protected by Coast Guard Cutters has become a $2 billion a year enterprise that catches and processes more metric tons of fish in Alaska than the rest of the United States combined.

And $2 billion is important. Protecting the environment is important. Saving lives is priceless.

And now Hamilton, commissioned in 1967, has passed the flag to Bertholf.

Fewer and fewer Hamilton class cutters will be seen in Alaskan waters over the next several years. The "378's" as Coasties affectionately call them, built in the late 1960s and early 1970s will all be decommissioned during the next few years.

Bertholf, Waesche and Stratton are the first three of the Hamilton class replacements. A fourth is currently being built with arrangements being made to build a fifth. Eventually the nation plans to build eight Bertholf class cutters.

For Alaska, it is important that the eight new Bertholf class cutters come on line as quickly as possible.

The Bering Sea and Gulf of Alaska routinely see "no name" hurricane force storms for over half the year.

The challenge of man versus extreme weather in Alaskan waters is well-documented by the popular TV show Deadliest Catch.

With the exception of the Bertholf and Hamilton class cutters plus one old Navy ship, the Coast Guard cutter Alex Haley home ported in Kodiak, no other Coast Guard cutters are capable of safely and effectively operating year round in the Bering Sea and Gulf of Alaska.

As Hamilton class cutters quietly fade away, much of the future safety and success of the Alaskan maritime rides with the aptly named Bertholf.

The Bertholf is the latest in a long line of cutters that have protected, defended and helped preserve the Alaskan way of life.

And with "at best" only eight Bertholf class cutters to replace 12 Hamilton class cutters; and with essentially no other cutters capable of safely and effectively operating year round in Alaska, the Bertholf class becomes even more important to Alaska.

That's why Bertholf "matters" to Alaska; because the maritime is critically important to Alaska.

After all, Alaska, with more coastline than the rest of the Nation combined, is the nation's foremost maritime state.

Rear Admiral Christopher C. Colvin is the Seventeenth Coast Guard District Commander based in Juneau.

Dogs of Nome back on the trail

By Kirsten Bey

There were 41 dogs, 7 mushers and a good number of spectators who showed up for the Nome Kennel Club 6 Dog – 6 Mile fun run Sunday afternoon. Even though the temperature was quite warm the trail was in pretty good shape; a little soft in places but not sloppy.

Teams left in the standard 2 minute intervals from near the snow dump area off the By-Pass Road, headed up Gold Hill, north toward Icy View, east past the dredge, south back to Gold Hill and then down Gold Hill to the finish line near the starting area.

A young moose showed up near the starting area shortly after the teams had taken off – the race marshal and spectators initially weren't sure if the moose was considering entering the race or was there simply as a spectator. After some deliberation, the moose headed west down the By-Pass Road.

Fortunately, the moose was gone by the time the teams returned. Everyone had a smooth run, and the dogs, while always happy to get to the finish line for treats, didn't appear tuckered out by the heat.

RESUPPLY — Sturdy Greenland Inuit dogs recharge to continue their journey from Nenana to Nome on a solo run with Jim Ryder. Not coveting a speed record, Ryder allowed them to rest until they awakened naturally, ready to go.

Iron Dogs: Nenana to Nome

By Sandra L. Medearis Jim Ryder's 10 freight dogs, trained up and hardy from other arctic treks, did not get to leave Nenana with the 2011 Norman Vaughn '25 Serum Run to Nome last month.

"My dogs have good feet, have good coats, everything but speed," Ryder said in Nome. The official run has its speed, and the 10 huskies from Wisconsin had their own strong pace.

Nonetheless, Ryder's team set 40 strong paws onto Front Street on March 29, having made the 768-mile journey just fine on their own.

Ryder's team comprised very special Greenland dogs - specially selected and specially bred—to handle long tough cold runs in northern Canada and Alaska.

"My dogs travel a steady four miles an hour. They have the Inuit look of huskies with small ears, thick large bones, long guard hairs, thick inner coat. At minus 45 degrees, they are just fine," Ryder said. Ryder had driven his dog truck from Wisconsin to Nenana looking forward to adventure on the trail commemorating 20 mushers and over 100 dogs that made the sled-dog relay of diphtheria antitoxin to Nome in 1925. Ryder had dog food and gear ready to go, so what the heck?

"I decided to run it solo. I started shipping food out to villages on the trail." Parcels of food went to Tanana, Ruby, Kaltag, Shaktoolik, White Mountain and Nome.

Ryder set out at 5:30 the morning of February 15 with his friends leaders Ice and Reena, Lakoo, Brit, Meekis, Bula, Shack, Gorda, Misha and Trix. Gorda is 14 years old; Misha is 10. The remainder of the team is six to seven years old. He started and finished with his 10 dogs.

Ryder trained his dogs on Madeline Island in Wisconsin. He then took up adventure mushing in Canada's high arctic. In 1999 he traveled 300 miles with a couple other mushers in the Hudson Bay area. In 2001, he took a similar adventure solo with 10 dogs. In 2002, he took a 750-mile jaunt along the shores of Hudson Ban and James Bay starting at Fort Severn and ending at Moosonee.

Ryder was telling the late explorer Col. Norman Vaughn about his 2002 adventure when Vaughn gave him the spark to make the commemorative journey. "He invited me, said 'C'mon,' but until 2011, life got in the way. Now I've done it," Ryder said.

Growing up in Wisconsin, Ryder said he has always liked winter activities, cold, snow and ice. He dreamed of hooking up dogs for sled travel when he was very young.

"This has been on the back burner of my brain since I was a child. It started when I was about 12 and never went away. Back then I made a harness from moose hide and a small wooden sled of wood," Ryder reminisced.

The dogs that brought Ryder from Nenana to Nome are not race dogs. They are adventure and touring dogs. In 1995, he searched for tough dogs, a Greenland breed. His three-dog foundation stock included two males from Greenland and a daughter of Grey Ice, a dog that traveled with Will Steger's International Arctic Project expedition from Russia to Canada's Ellesmere Island via the North Pole in 1995. Gorda, 14 years old, is from the first litter.

They are steady, strong dogs," Ryder said. "If I get into trouble, I will get into trouble real slow—my dogs go 4 miles an hour."

But Ryder did not get into trouble. He credits his dogs and his concentration on the here and now.

"This was a life-changing adventure for me, said Ryder, who had his 60th birthday on the trail. "Each day you do your part—I did not think about Nome, just the next hour. My thinking had to be in the present, and then I would make it to Nome. My destination each day was the evening's rest for me and my dogs. You keep your wits because you have to keep your judgment."

"I had no plan for any dog evacuation along the trail. Just a start and end plan," he said.

The Serum Run trail took Ryder and his team from Nenana along the Tanana River to where it meets the Yukon River at the village of Tanana. He followed the Yukon to where he picked up the Iditarod Trail at Kaltag. Then he took the portage to Unalakleet on the coast.

Along the way he met Iditarod Red Lantern musher Ellen Halverson between Shaktoolik and Koyuk. He met another musher on the trail, too—a guy.

"I asked who he was. He said 'I'm Rick Swenson," Ryder laughed. "I said, 'I'm Jim Ryder.' I think I was the only one on the trail who did not recognize him."

While his trip was smooth, he did have some excitement along the way. One time was when he had pitched his tent on the trail to avoid the four feet of fluff along the side.

"I heard a snow machine roaring toward me. I was sitting up in my tent. I thought, 'I better lay down in a hurry. Maybe it will roll right over the top of me. If I am sitting up,' ... At the last moment, I heard it turn and go around me."

Another time, "I saw a big animal crossing the Yukon. He didn't see me, the dogs didn't see him. I thought it was a bear—trying to get up the bank off the river. Coming around the bend, the dogs caught the scent."

Ryder pulled off into three to four feet of snow and waited. Then he dragged his leaders back onto the trail and progressed six miles where he made camp and set out a smorgasbord of fish for his dogs.

"I had a loaded gun, but no bear appeared," Ryder said.

Near the beginning of the journey, Ryder was thrilled to meet Josephine Roberts in Tanana, eldest daughter of Edgar Nollner, one of the dogsled relay drivers in the original Serum Run. "She fixed me up with a place to rest and an egg sandwich and other food."

Ryder said he was happy with his trip across Alaska.

"I completed the entire trip on faith and trust in my dogs, fellow man, and wonderful help from people in the villages. I couldn't have planned how well it came together. I found people tough, hearty and independent, who would give you their last piece of fish because they wanted to take care of you while you were in their territory," Ryder said. "The village hospitality was matchless. I was humbled."

Ryder ran the Serum Run trail from Nenana to Nome as the culmination and fruition of his five-year plan to finish dog mushing. While he set to getting his way back to Wisconsin, Ryder's dogs enjoyed extended snow in Nome.

"I miss my dogs but they are in a good place... long winters with good people. My plan was to leave them in Nome and I followed my plan," Ryder said last week.

Clarence Edward Savetilik, Sr. was born on August 30, 1946 to Daniel and Naomi Savetilik in Shaktoolik. He attended grade school at Old Site, went to Wrangell for a year or two, then to Mt. Edgecumbe and on his senior year he went to an Oregon school where he graduated.

He worked for the late Bill Bodey down the Yukon for many years. He was a captain for one of the tender boats called Sunshine II. He went to Middle Mouth to pick up fish from fishermen from Kotlik. One day he asked one of the older fisherman, "Who is that girl up there?" His response was "that's my daughter." All he said was "Oops! Oh!" That's where he met his wife, Edna. They called the Sunshine II tender boat their "Love Boat."

He married Edna on November 17, 1973. They lost their first son Cyrus on August 8, 1974. He got hired as a policeman in Kotlik, where they lived until he decided to move to Shaktoolik in August 1976, two months after Priscilla was born, there they got three more girls and two

In the early 1980s he got hired as a Village Public Safety Officer. He went to Sitka for six weeks of VPSO Training. After he put in 10 years of service as a VPSO for Shaktoolik, his wife told him to quit.

On Feb 12, 2000 they adopted TJ, whom he faithfully took care of while his wife worked. He also spoiled him and got him anything he wanted. He was a great subsistence hunter, he loved to cook, loved to go out in the country, boating, and ice fishing. He made sure his family had enough food for the winter and summer months, until cancer took its toll. He fought this illness for almost three years. ## Easter Eggs: A healthy holiday food

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Easter eggs are thought to be an early Christian adaptation of an ancient Zoroastrian custom of decorating eggs in the spring as a way of celebrating new birth and new life.

In some medical circles, eggs are considered a poor choice for a symbol of a healthy life. In fact, some experts view eggs in general, and Easter eggs in particular, as a possible health hazard. Each Easter, various health departments warn of Salmonella poisoning and an increased risk of heart disease from consuming this holiday favorite.

Why the same agencies do not issue similar warnings regarding the harmful health effects of substitute Easter egg candies, marshmallow rabbits, and milk chocolates is beyond the scope of this article.

It turns out that the ancients were right: eggs are good for you. Modern research proves that eggs are a compact, easy-to-prepare, whole food likely to improve memory, help eyesight, and lead to weight loss.

Eggs spent several decades on an often-misunder-stood list of foods that may cause heart disease because eggs are loaded with cholesterol, and it is known that certain forms of cholesterol in the blood stream are associated with a higher risk of cardiovascular disease.

Fortunately for egg lovers, research shows that eggs do not raise the risk of heart disease for most people. In 1999, the Journal of the American Medical Association published an important study of 120,000 men and women showing that consumption of up to seven eggs a week does not increase the risk of heart disease or stroke in otherwise healthy people. The only increase in risk was seen in patients with diabetes. Various studies since then show that eggs may cause an increase in overall cholesterol in about 30 percent of people. This may sound alarming, but the increase occurs in both "good" (HDL) and "bad" (LDL) cholesterol so that the overall risk of heart disease remains unchanged.

Cholesterol may be the most infamous component of eggs. But from a health point of view, the average egg, at only 71 calories, has a long list of vitamins, minerals, and nutrients that promotes overall wellbeing.

The typical large egg has 6 grams of protein and 3.5 grams of healthy unsaturated fats. The fat-soluble vitamins A, D, E, and K are concentrated in eggs. Eggs are also a good source of B vitamins, zinc, iron, and folate.

Eggs likely improve and maintain eye health. Egg yolks are a rich source of lutein and zeaxanthin, relatives of beta-carotene, which have been linked to a reduced risk of agerelated macular degeneration. A study published in the American Journal of Clinical Nutrition reported that patients who consumed two to four eggs a day for five weeks showed an improvement in the health of the retina of the eye.

Eggs are also a rich source of choline, an essential nutrient thought to improve memory and support healthy muscle function.

Interestingly, egg consumption may also provide one of the secrets to weight loss. Eating eggs causes a person to feel full longer. In a 2005 study published in the Journal of the American College of Nutrition, researchers found that subjects who consumed two eggs for breakfast felt full longer and ate less over the next 36 hours than others who ate a bagelbased breakfast with the same number of calories. Subsequent research by these scientists showed that people who consumed eggs for breakfast lost 65 percent more weight and maintained a higher level of energy compared to those who ate a bagelbased breakfast with the same number of calories.

Of course, these benefits do not extend to the bacon, sausage, hash browns, or other sources of saturated fat typically prepared with eggs. However, it does not take long to acquire a taste for eggs with a healthy mix of seasoning, onions, peppers, or tomatoes that will afford the greatest health benefit.

After decorating a few eggs this Easter weekend, consider enjoying a guilt-free meal that includes this lifegiving super food.

Saying it Sincerely

By Linda Maack KNOM Inspirational Director For the Nome Ministerial Assocition

"Sometimes we get angry, but we must not condemn. Let the good Lord do his job and you just pray for them." These song lyrics seem innocent enough. It offers great advice with a sweet melody, which can easily attract music lovers. Words of caution to this song. Things aren't always what they seem.

Being a country fan, I fell in love with the song's catchy tune. Doing the same routine with all my new songs, I listened to the song on repeat and to eventually sing them at the top of my lungs! It was a sunny afternoon and I was listening to the song, singing it out loud. That's when I realized this might not be the best idea. Not because of my terrible singing; it wasn't a good idea because of the lyrics of the song. Many times the catchy lyrics distract us; we don't always hear the message underneath. If someone heard lyrics, not in the context of the song, they certainly will not appreciate it. To better understand, the lyrics continue praying the individual receives bad luck. The song, "Pray for You" is sung by Jaron and the Long Road to Love.

The distraction of the fun tune could relate to Genesis's story of Eve and the apple. Eve was distracted by the serpent's clever words, so she went against God's wishes and ate the fruit.

By all means, I am not telling you to delete songs that don't have a positive message because you will end up like Eve. If that were the case, some of us might not have a big music library. Look at the bigger picture. When we listen to music, talk to friends, or work hard, do our actions accurately reflect our beliefs?

I will leave you with one final thought from the book of Ephesians 6:10-18: "Trust in the Lord with all your heart and lean not on your own understanding; in all your ways acknowledge him and he will make your paths straight."

Compromise reached in coastal management bill

By Diana Haecker

The coastal management program that was about to sunset on July 1 is getting closer to being extended by six years. A compromise bill passed the Alaska House of Representatives last Saturday, with the companion bill SB 45 in the Senate Finance committee. The bill re-authorizes and amends the Alaska Coastal Management program, allowing the state and local coastal communities and interests to keep a seat at the table on coastal projects. The item was one of the 10 issues Governor Sean Parnell put in his proclamation to be addressed by the first special session of the legislature.

The coastal management program gives the state the right to review federal agency and federally permitted activities in coastal zones and was severely cut back in 2003 under Governor Frank Murkowski who, among other things, disbanded the coastal policy council. Without meaningful local input over federally permitted projects in coastal zones, legislators have tried to revamp the program for years now, but never came to a compromise until now.

The governor repeated last year's argument that local communities should not have the power to veto a project, but that language was taken out of the bill he initially submitted. A House finance committee version of the bill was adopted that includes the creation of a nine-person Alaska Coastal Policy board - consisting of four state commissioners and five public members from coastal dis-

Rep. Neal Foster said he is confident that the bill strikes a good compromise, as the governor backed off on language that locals should not have veto power. The bill also did away with designated areas, where districts needed to define areas that caused rubs with the state over designations like subsistence or habitat. Foster said that the bill also included a mechanism to elevate complaints and made appeals to decisions possible. In terms of public involvement, Foster said he hasn't received any correspondence from individual constituents asking to beef up the program. "But I did receive a letter from the City of Nome expressing that they want to strengthen the coastal management program," Foster said.

North Slope borough mayor Edward Itta commented on the compromise, saying that he still has concerns with this bill, but he could support it since it made progress in two areas. "It helps bring local communities to the table, whereas for the past few years they have felt like they were pushed to the back of the room as big projects were planned for their communities," Itta said, addressing the House finance committee. Itta said he was pleased to see that the bill reconstitutes a coastal policy board. "It also establishes clearer mechanisms for the State and the districts to engage in the process leading to approved policies," Itta

A legislative audit of the ACMP presented to the legislature in December 2010 said the program is failing to meet its objective of building consensus on large development projects and confirms that changes to the program "have limited the ability of coastal resource districts to establish enforceable policies." Currently, there are 25 coastal resource districts with approved district coastal management plans. Prior to the ACMP's changes, their district plans had over 1,300 enforceable

With the Alaska coastal management program in place as is. Senator Donny Olson said prior to the House compromise, the Senate is prepared to let the ACMP sunset and hand control over to the federal government. Olson said that while this was not the preferred outcome, he was ready to let it happen if no meaningful local input mechanisms could be built into the bill. Olson said that it is crucial that an ACMP reform needed to include a coastal policy board to give coastal districts a voice at the table, and to ensure that coastal districts can create enforceable policies that address issues not covered by state or federal laws.

Foster pointed out that the bill is a compromise that forced all sides to give up something. Rep. Reggie Joule (D-Kotzebue) agreed. "I believe all sides negotiated their positions in good faith, and that we all came together in the end to stand up for our coastal communities," Joule said. "Our majority placed 'Responsible Resource Development' in our guiding principles and the ACMP is a check on development to do just that — make sure projects are vetted, not vetoed, by all parties who stand to gain or be impacted by develop-

Indirect costs

Nickels also asked about the $40,000 loss in indirect costs for FY12. She wondered if the reason the school district hadn't recovered these costs was that it hadn't spent its grants out. It was suggested she email the question to Wojtanek for an answer.

"The eating place" finds sense of place in subsistence lifestyles

By Diana Haecker

The Alaska Design Forum, in an effort to reach out to rural communities, staged a week-long event in Nome that centered around food as a conversation starter and the most primal gathering to share a meal, hold a conversation and thus form community.

The statewide project called "Common Space" took place in Anchorage, Fairbanks, Juneau, Homer and Nome at the same time. Every town had a different project going that examined how common space is used in communities. In Nome, the project was to create a common space with food. Michael Gerace with the Alaska Design Forum, and New Jersey architects Iain Kerr and Petia Morozov traveled to Nome in their search to find a place where a community still uses methods of hunting and gathering to subsist and therefore has a sense of place and a connectedness to it.

We found that the practices of subsistence living and gathering create a community and that the methods of hunting, gathering and sharing are fundamental to people's sense of and belonging to a place," said Michael Gerace.

In most of the world people are removed from growing, harvesting and hunting food. "It's like you're not living of the planet anymore but just on it," Gerace said. As most of the food is mass-produced in large factories, the individual is only coming into play at the checkout lane in the supermarket at the end of the food chain. Gerace reasoned that as a result, people become separate from their place and thus are no longer aware even of who they are. "We found in Nome, that people are truly of their place," Gerace said. The architects received a crash course in subsistence foods from Marie Tozier and went ptarmigan hunting with two of her sons. Richard Beneville connected the artists with many Nomeites, and they received subsistence food items and stories from Jim Stimpfle, Robin Thomas, Karen Olanna and Brian Weyiouanna, among others. They hosted three dinners for the community, culminating in a feast of subsistence food in which the donated 'raw' food items were turned into rabbit pie, ptarmigan on potato, fish pie from halibut and cod, caribou stew and sausage from ptarmigan liver.

The architects tried to find answers in Nome that could, in good subsistence style, be shared with the rest of the world. They plan to produce a cookbook for Nome named "The Eating Place" with Nome recipes, stories and photos and metaphysical commentary. "It actually is more a field guide to future food ways," added Gerace. The second component is a website that would become a living document as it's updated with more stories, recipes and videos from Nomeites. They found that while subsistence is nothing new for people of the region, the lessons learned from it could be applied anywhere in the world. Ptarmingan hunting in New Jersey? "No, in the urban environment the same methods are not possible, but we can create possibilities for a culture that supports eco-systems and that helps generate a sense of place and awareness of it,' said Gerace.

City Council mulls sales tax revisions

Council considers ban on smoking in all public places

By Laurie McNicholas

The Nome Common Council moved the much-discussed revision of the city sales tax code closer to completion at a meeting on Monday. The council heard first reading of an ordinance to amend the existing sales tax ordinance and voted unanimously to advance it to second reading, a public hearing and final action at the next regular meeting.

Brooks Chandler, the city's attorney, prepared the proposed ordinance based on a draft by John P. Johns, a certified public accountant who developed the revisions under contract with the city and in consultation with the council at two work sessions. Chandler described the following sales tax code changes in the proposed ordinance in a memo to City Manager Josie Bahnke dated April 19.

Section 1 adds an exemption required by state law to the city's sales tax code. The exemption applies to sales made to general contractors for use on state awarded construction projects. Subcontractors are not required to add tax to the invoice they submit to the general contractor. However, subcontractors will have to pay tax on purchases they make themselves. The exemption does not apply to federally funded projects, nor does it apply to projects that contain state funding but are awarded by someone other than the state.

NJUS set to approve spending plan

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Joint Utility System board met in work session April 19 to look over a business plan and budget for next year. The draft budget shows in summary total revenue of $13.6 million and total expenses minus depreciation of $12.9 million, leaving a net margin of around $685,391. Figuring in depreciation of $4.9 million leaves a deficit of about $4.2 million.

Senate and House in stalemate over capital budget

By Diana Haecker

Entering the second week of the special legislative session, bills that were caught in the logjam caused by the capital budget impasse between the Alaska Senate and the House of Representatives were passed through both chambers. Among those bills was the extension of the Regulatory Commission of Alaska, establishing the fourth Saturday of July as Ted Stevens Day, and the supplemental budget for FY 2011 to fund shortfalls in this year's budget.

The biggest items still left to be done are the fiscal year 2012 capital budget and the Alaska Coastal Management plan. While negotiations between House Representatives and Senators are ongoing, the logjam did not break over Easter weekend.

On Friday, the Senate Finance Committee revised the capital budget and offered some compromise after negotiations with the House. The sticking points were the

Letters -

Dear Editor,

We read your article about our project in the paper. Thanks so much for giving "Eating Place" coverage and for featuring that lovely photo of the Tozier boys!

There are two significant points we'd like corrected if possible:

- There is no mention that we, Petia Morozov and Iain Kerr, are two members of the artist collective called SPURSE. It was SPURSE who was commissioned by Alaska Design Forum to develop a project in Nome, not us as individuals.

Michael Gerace is a member of Alaska Design Forum, and acted as liaison and project coordinator for our project. He is not a member of SPURSE.

Thanks for your understanding! Best,

Petia Morozov of SPURSE

Dear Editor,

This is a special report on the City of Dillingham and their unannounced spring water games. If you plan on visiting Dillingham you should be aware of the water along the side of the road- and young drivers. During the spring it is widely know in Dillingham not to walk on the side of the road. As a recent visitor to Dillingham, I experienced the game of Splash first hand, and I learned afterwards through talking with locals that many of them have been on the losing end of this game. Keep in mind that it doesn't matter which side of the road, or which way you're walking. The opposing team I like to call the "Hooligans" are still in Dillingham and working hard looking for new victims. As of this past week the Hooligans are 3 and visiting teachers 0. Here are a few problems that I have with this game. The Hooligans never give the visitors a chance to splash them back, and the city doesn't provide a rental hooptie so that we can join in on the fun. At the very least, if this game is going to continue, visitors should have warning signs of all game areas so we can wear wetsuits

Big Bad Bullies

We try to discourage bullying in our children. Parents, teachers and fellow students try all they can to educate and advocate against it. We attempt to stamp it out in our schools and it pops up in Juneau. The halls of the state capitol are bursting with bullies.

How are we going to get rid of it in our schools when the governor of Alaska threatens to kill funding for projects in the districts of state legislators who don't vote for the governor's oil tax incentive bill? Of course the legislators, not to be caught on the wrong side of the bully stick, tied the governor's energy projects to an oil barrel and twisted the knots. Maybe turnabout is fair play.

It seems like not much was accomplished in the 90-day-wonder session. Yeah, we got a second verse to the State Flag Song, and some kind of Public Garden Day. So what's with the 90-day sessions? They seem so useless; yet think of all the overtime pay for an extra session. Maybe we could even have some bipartisan civility if the session was 120 days. The extra month would perhaps encourage some serious legislation instead of intransigence, petty bickering and bullying. -N.L.M.-

Alaska State News

Compiled by Diana Haecker

Energy bill passes Legislature

proposed Susitna hydroelectric power project has passed the Legislature. A bill gives the Alaska Energy Authority the statutory powers to file a Federal Energy Regulatory Commission preliminary permit application for the controversial Susitna damming project. Senate Bill 42 also included $25 million for weatherization programs and $25 million for the Renewable Energy Fund for projects in areas with the highest energy costs in the state; $10 million for the Southeast Energy Fund to assist with energy projects in the region; $34 million for the Power Cost Equalization Program; and more than $15 million for rural power system upgrades and bulk fuel storage to bring down the cost of diesel power generation.

The governor champions the Susitna hydro project because it is speculated that it could help the state reach the goal of getting 50 percent of its energy from renewable and alternative energy sources by 2025. Proponents of the project anticipate stable and cheap energy for the Railbelt and the creation of jobs. Although support was widespread in committee hearings, some legislators raised concerns. Rep. Les Gara asked about fisheries impacts and Rep. Mike Doogan questioned the hefty $5 billion construction bill and funding thereof. Rep. Bryce Edgmon asked how rural Alaskans could benefit from the project that would serve the railbelt

The final version of SB 42 includes a requirement for a "Susitna River Power Project annual report" to the legislature. Both chambers passed the bill in last week's special session. Rural Alaska's energy needs were only mentioned in reference to how lower Railbelt energy rates would benefit the Power Cost Equalization benefits paid to subsidize the high cost of energy in rural communities. The governor requested $65.7 million for further studies, but the money is part of the capital budget, which is at the center of the impasse between House and Senate.

Arrests made in child pornography cases

Last week, the Anchorage Police Department cyber crimes unit arrested two men in separate cases on charges of distribution of child pornography. Police arrested 51-year-old Anchorage resident Jeffrey Vancamp, charging him with two counts of distribution of child pornography and one count of the online enticement of a minor. His bail was set at $20,000. The investigation crossed state borders when APD was informed by the Tallapoosa County Sheriff's Department in Dadeville, Alabama that a male using the screen name "poetryman1232005" communicating in chat rooms and via cell phone text messages with a 14-year-old female from Alabama. He was identified as Jeffrey Vancamp. The man chatted and sent images of child sexual exploitation including children as young as about 5 years old. Vancamp allegedly also sent child sexual exploitation images over the Internet to a person living in Seward.

In a separate case, APD's Cyber Crimes unit arrested 23-year-old Anchorage resident William E. Riddles II, charging him with one count of distribution of child pornography and two counts of the possession of child pornography. His bail was set at $5,000. APD detective Mark Thomas was working undercover and received 28 images and videos of child pornography from Riddles. Riddles computer was searched and hundreds of images and videos of Child Pornography were found, some with children as young as 4 or 5 years old. The Anchorage Police Department is looking for any other possible victims related to these information that could lead to the identification of other victims of these crimes. Case detective Mark Thomas can be reached at (907)

Conservationists challenge state over critical habitat

The fight over critical habitat for polar bears and Cook Inlet beluga whales continues as conservation organizations intervened in lawsuits that challenge federal protection of the species. The Center for Biological Diversity, Defenders of Wildlife and Greenpeace intervened in a lawsuit to defend polar bear critical habitat against challenges from oil companies and the state of Alaska. The Center also notified the federal Fish and Wildlife Service to sue the agency for failing to protect the Pacific walrus under the Endangered Species Act, despite finding that the walrus is threatened with extinction because of climate change. On Feb. 8, the Service designated the Pacific walrus as a "candidate" species under the Endangered Species Act, which means the walrus could wait indefinitely for protection.

The Alaska Oil and Gas Association and the state of Alaska are challenging the Interior Department's 2010 designation of more than 120 million acres of critical habitat for the polar bear in Arctic Alaska. They complain that the protections for polar bear habitat will be an impediment to oil drilling in the Arctic.

The Alaska Oil and Gas Association and the state of Alaska filed their challenges to polar bear habitat in federal district court in Alaska last month. Alaska Native corporations separately notified Interior of their intent to challenge the critical habitat rule but to date have not filed a lawsuit. The Legislature on Monday passed a resolution that opposes the designation by the Oceanic Atmospheric Administration of 3,016 square miles of upper Cook Inlet and Kachemak Bay as critical habitat for beluga whales.

Section 2 says the clerk or assessor has authority to make an initial determination whether an exemption applies. Section 3 increases the fee for a sales tax license to $25.

Section 4 adds a specific reference to bingo and pull tab sales to the section on reports from those involved in charitable gaming.

Section 5 adds a section allowing for the filing of an amended return.

Section 6 adds a section allowing a limited possibility to obtain an extension of time to file a return.

Section 7 adds a section restricting use of information on sales tax returns and requiring that returns be kept confidential.

Section 8 adds a section specifying how partial payments of overdue tax are allocated between delinquent tax, penalty and interest.

Section 9 clarifies that no more than a 15 percent penalty may be assessed on tax more than three months overdue. The existing language did not have an explicit cap on penalty. This section also increases interest on overdue tax payments to the maximum rate allowed by law-15 percent.

Section 10 replaces the current provisions for the estimation of tax in instances where no return has been filed. The procedure for accomplishing this is made more specific, and the possibility of obtaining a review of the estimate by the city manager in an informal hearing has been added.

Section 11 adds sections related to audits which allow the city to have a tax collector reimburse the city for the cost of an audit if an under reporting of tax due is discovered. It also allows for an appeal of audit conclusions to the city manger.

Section 12 replaces existing language on remedies with much more detailed procedures for fines, tax liens, acts constituting violations of the sales tax code and civil penalties available in addition the 15 percent penalty.

Section 13 changes code language regarding where a sale occurs. The current code places a sale in Nome if any "constituent part" of the transaction took place within city limits – a somewhat nebulous concept. The removal of this language may increase the number of situations in which the taxability of a transaction is not clear because some of the work performed or materials supplied was done outside Nome boundaries. In part to limit the number of potentially ambiguous transactions, subsection (b) has been modified to eliminate the tax exemption for goods and materials delivered outside city boundaries to other places in Alaska. Now the out of town delivery must also be out of state.

"This is our proposal for simplifying this section, not the proposal of Mr. Johns," Chandler wrote. "We make it simply because the underlying reason for exempting these types of transactions to begin with was based on federal constitutional notions regarding interstate commerce which we do not believe are applicable entirely in state transaction. We also considered where there was a connection between out of town but within Alaska sales and the City and believe such a connection does exist by reason of Nome's status as a regional hub for Norton Sound communities.'

Section 14 adds definitions that are intended to increase clarity.

Section 15 allows the city manager to adopt regulations interpreting the sales tax code.

Smoking pollution control

The council heard first reading of an ordinance to regulate smoking in eating establishments, public buildings and taxis and moved it forward to second reading, a public hearing and final action at the next regular meeting by a 5-1 vote. Councilman Stan Andersen voted no. The ordinance would amend Title 10 of the Nome Code of Ordinances by adding a new Chapter 10.50 titled "Smoking pollution control.'

The proposed ordinance quotes legislative findings on health hazards induced by breathing secondhand tobacco smoke. "...The City Council hereby finds that it is in the [interest of] public health, safety, and welfare to supplement State regulation of the use of tobacco and tobacco products by regulating their use in eating establishments, places of employment, public buildings, and taxicabs within the city of Nome," the statement concludes.

The proposed ordinance provides a detailed list of places where smoking is prohibited. The list includes all enclosed public places within the City of Nome and all enclosed areas that are places of employment, including office buildings, hotels, restaurants, bars, medical facilities, stores and all other types of busi-

Other actions by council

The council approved a resolution extending the term of the city's memorandum of understanding with Victoria Erickson as ambulance chief of the Nome Volunteer Ambulance Dept. from May 12, 2011 through May 12, 2013 with a monthly stipend of $500. The city entered into a memorandum of understanding with Erickson on May 11, 2009 for a two-year term.

The council adopted a resolution requesting FY1 12 payment in lieu of taxes funding from the Dept. of Commerce, Community and Economic Development. The Payment in Lieu of Taxes program for cities in the unorganized borough is funded through the U.S. Dept. of Interior. State law and program regulations require the governing body of a city to adopt a resolution requesting payment and certifying that certain minimum standards have been met.

The council waived a fee of $700

Council members considered recommendations from the Nome Planning Commission for traffic changes on the Nome Bypass Road. The commission recommended that (1) the Bypass Road from the intersection of the Bob Blodgett highway to East Front Street be posted as a 25 mile per hour road; (2) a four-way stop intersection be developed at East Seventh Avenue and East N Street; and (3) a four-way stop intersection be developed at East G Street and East Sixth Avenue.

Councilman Jerald Brown made a motion to adopt the first two recommendations from the commission. Andersen said the public should first have an opportunity to consider the recommendations. Brown withdrew

The Lions Club will distribute free hot dogs and pop to all yellow bag cleaners on June 4 from noon to 5 p.m. at Anvil City Square, with a prize drawing at 5:15 p.m.

Norway tour postponed

Mayor Denise Michels said a public policy tour of Norway hosted by the Institute of the North and scheduled for April 30 through May 8 has been postponed, perhaps until August, because the Alaska Legislature is still in session. Fourteen legislators including Rep. Neal Foster of Nome are listed among confirmed participants in the tour in a draft itinerary included in the council's meeting packet. Tour participants are to examine the Norway model in energy, natural resources, economic development, public finance and government while visiting several cities and meeting heads of govern-

Michels received an invitation to join the tour in January, and last month the council approved funds for her and a council member to participate in the tour at a cost of about $3,000 each. Councilman Jim West is listed among tour participants, as is Utility Manager John Handeland.

Small-scale wind for rural homes

By Sandra L. Medearis

Here's an easy riddle for anyone who attended the recent annual energy symposium: What weighs about a hundred pounds, costs around $500 to make at home, can be fairly easily repaired and needs no fossil fuel to operate—just wind?

No clue? OK, what could go to camp this summer in the pickup truck to provide power or pump water and power equipment? What could go to winter camp to provide lighting?

OK, more clues: What could be built in the shop or garage, be easily installed in the back yard to reduce pollution and lower residential dependence on oil, coal, gas, and public power generation?

What the heck, this will give it

LOOK, LOOK! (bottom, left)—As fuel prices rise, this inexpensive wind turbine drew a crowd at a workshop April 20 and left them wanting more; Carol Gales, program developer at NW Campus promised to bring the builders back for a hands-on workshop.

away: What was the hottest item on display at a Northwest Campus workshop last Wednesday evening during Energy Summit III, built by former Nome-Beltz student Dwayne Ellanna with his students?

You got it! The 1.1 kilowatt wind turbine is good for all the above. About 40 people attended the workshop April 20 to watch Ellanna demonstrate the home manufacture of the wind machine and then went into the parking lot to see it in operation.

Ellanna had an attentive audience taking notes as the specter of $6-$7 fuel oil and higher electrical power prices loom over the this summer's fuel barge arrivals. Testing of the turbine for efficiency and durability is in progress. Ellanna and his students have larger models on the workbench for 3kw, 5kw and 7kw scale.

About 40 to 50 people attended the two-day energy symposium sponsored by Nome Chamber of Commerce in partnership with Kawerak, Inc. and Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation. The summit's mission was to give information to villages that they need to get started on strategic energy planning to increase their chances for success in funding for energy efficiency, conservation and local and renewable energy projects.

Ellanna, systems administrator of UAF Geophysical Institute and adjunct instructor with UAF Community and Technical College Process Technology, Instrumentation and Power Generation Programs and Brian Ellingson, program coordinator for the school, and member of the Alaska Process Industries Career Consortium both emphasized the need for training people, especially local people who want to create and maintain innovative energy projects.

"After our training, you can go to work at a number of installations on common technologies," Ellingson said.

Doug Johnson of Nome Joint Utility System agreed that training needs to go hand-in-hand with the new technologies.

"We spend a lot on technology and not enough on people," he said. "You have to bring people in to perform operations that are not that complicated."

Ellanna commented that portable computers and software as well as portable labs can go to sites for training.

"Finding talented individuals in this industry is the biggest obstacle," Kirk Garoutte of Susitna Energy Systems, said.

Process technicians and operators may also work in many industries including oil and gas production, chemical manufacture, petroleum refining, mining and milling, power generation and utilities, waste and water treatment, seafood and other processing.

Blue Jays return to the nest

By Greg Puryear

The Region 1 Music Festival took place in Dillingham April 13-16. This year's festival was open to a vast geographic area, says Ricky Lind, music director of Dillingham High School. Ricky sent out invitations to schools from Barrow to the Aleutian Islands. He wanted to see if he could get more schools from his and other school districts that do not usually send choirs or bands to the spring festival.

This year there were seven schools: Bethel Regional High, Dillingham Middle High School, King Cove School, Kotzebue High School, Nome-Beltz High School, Unalakleet High School, and Lewis Angapak Memorial School in Tuntutuliak. This is the second year that the Tuntutuliak Blue Jay Choir has traveled to the Region 1 Music Festival.

Most bands/choirs arrived Wednesday afternoon to start a rigorous rehearsal schedule that started at 8 a.m. Thursday morning, and worked eight-hour days. Every year there are guest professionals who work hard to prepare students for a mass band or mass choir concert at the end of the festival on Saturday night. This year's guest choir director, Dr. Jaunelle Celaire, came from Fairbanks, and the guest conductor, Mr. Dale Tumey, from Anchorage. The participants had special things to do in the evenings like watch a live recording of Beyonce, a movie night, and a dance Saturday night.

The Blue Jays really learned a lot this year, and worked hard to stay eligible for all of their activities. They have performed a winter concert at ball games, Region 1 Music Festival, and soon the spring concert at home. This year they have grown musically, and from this last festival they have brought home more tips to build all levels of singers. Their teacher says he is very proud to watch them build their minds, skills and memories.

Feds seek input to shape ocean policy

By Diana Haecker

Changes in the warming Arctic and the need for a cohesive policy safeguarding the oceans, coasts and Great Lakes rose to the attention of the White House and with an executive order President Barack Obama last year established an ocean policy task force that was charged to come up with recommendations to maintain the health of ocean and coastlines in the US.

The National Ocean Council was formed and part of their work is now to formulate an arctic strategic action plan on how to best deal with changes affecting the warming arc-

Last week, the U.S. Arctic Research Commission and Alaska Center for Climate Assessment and Policy at the University of Alaska Fairbanks held a webinar to inform coastal Alaskans and the public about the arctic strategic action plan and to solicit input on what is important to them and why. UAF's Brooke Gamble said that more than 230 participants from federal agencies, Canada and Alaska state agencies as well as non-profit organizations tuned in.

Dr. Mary Boatman with the National Ocean Council and Dr. Cheryl Rosa of the US Arctic Research Commission gave a power-point presentation that outlined the Arctic strategic action plan in the making.

Given that climate change has a more dramatic impact on polar regions than temperate climate zones, the arctic faces challenges of thawing permafrost, deteriorating multiyear sea ice, coastal erosion and sea ice loss. The council has the marching orders to address a few things in their action plan: how to conserve, protect and sustainably manage arctic coastal and ocean resources, respond to the risk of increased pollution and other environmental degradation on humans and marine species and safeguard living marine resources.

Also, according to the final recommendations by the ocean task force, the plan should include arctic region collaboration between nations to respond to emergencies and improve the scientific understanding of the Arctic eco-system.

As melting ice increases access to the arctic, multinational resource development corporations and the tourism and transportation industry are poised to take advantage of it. At stake is balancing these added pressures with subsistence resources that sustain local communities along the coast.

The National Ocean Council proposed in their webinar to develop an integrated Arctic observing network, to study arctic change and conduct mapping and charting.

One of the goals is to promote stewardship of the arctic seas and to encourage sustainable resource development. Part of the plan is also to gather observations of changes in weather patterns, pollution and ocean acidification, and to find out how fisheries, subsistence resources and coastal communities are affected.

The National Ocean Council plans to release the draft strategic action plans in the summer of 2011 and then asks the public for more comments. The administration accepts comments on the arctic strategic action plan on their website at www.whitehouse.gov/administration/eop/oceans/comment.

Denali Commission holds listening session in Nome

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Denali Commission, a project pushed by late Sen. Ted Stevens, has leveraged over several billion dollars from federal and other sources to support health care, transportation, education, energy, housing and training projects in rural Alaska. State of Alaska has invested over $2 billion in infrastructure development in Denali Commission program areas.

Since its start in 1998, the Commission has provided or facilitated millions of dollars for projects in Nome. On April 20, the Commission held a listening session in Nome to see what is envisioned as the body's role in delivery of federal services, projects and programs to rural Alaska in the future in response to three questions:

• Why is the Denali Commission important to rural Alaska?

 What recommendations would you make as to the manner in which the Denali Commission does business?

• What should the future role and/or focus of the Denali Commission be in rural Alaska?

Denali Commission staff Monica Armstrong and Karen Johnson opened the mike in Nome in the session at Pioneer Hall during Energy Summit III, a symposium to provide villages information to get started on an energy plan.

Nome people had plenty to say, including Pearl Mikulski, Kawerak, Inc. vice president, Community Services Division; Brent Petrie, Alaska Village Electric Cooperative; Paul Ivanoff of Unalakleet; and Carol Piscoya, Norton Sound Health Among the comments:

• The Denali Commission is important to rural Alaska as an expedimeans to help make coordinated resources and assistance available to construct needed infrastructure in rural Alaska.

• We are in great need of roads, ports, power grids, water and sewer, tank farms, clinics, high-speed Internet access. Federal funding agencies do not understand the issues with constructing projects in Alaska. There is an attitude that our communities are too small to be deserving of these infrastructures, or that the systems are too expensive to maintain when costs are figured per · Recommend to provide a process for rural Alaskans to have their input considered in the Denali Commission decision making and recommend who should sit on various work groups possibly to make decisions and meet needs.

• Recommend, in concert with DC partners, to establish a clearing house to share information on proven project plans, budgets, materials, designs, cost effective electrical and mechanical systems, subject matter experts, potential contractors and areas of expertise.

 Establish DC-approved conflict of interest policies for workgroups and commissioners.

 Amend Denali Commission Act to clarify the role of commissioners.

 Streamline the processes for application for and awarding of project

• Urge that DC continue in partnership with NSHC to support village clinics. "Without clinics we are unable to provide adequate patient care. Our focus is 'patient first',' Piscoya said.

MRSA: An epidemic in rural Alaska

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

You may have heard that the bacteria MRSA is back in the news.

Methicillin-resistant Stapholococcus aureus (MRSA) is a contagious bacterium that causes common boillike skin infections and occasionally more serious infections of the bloodstream, urine, or lungs.

Unlike other bacteria that infect the skin, MRSA is resistant to almost all oral antibiotics and many I.V. antibiotics as well. At one time, it was thought to be a problem only in hospitals, but over the last 10 years, MRSA has become increasingly prevalent in communities of rural Alaska. It is estimated that as many as 13 percent of people in some rural communities carry the MRSA bacteria on their skin without any sign of infection.

People who carry the MRSA bacteria are more likely to develop a future skin infection or pass the bacteria to others.

According to the Arctic Investigations of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) in Alaska, certain people in rural Alaska have an increased risk for acquiring a MRSA infection:

- People who have taken several courses of antibiotics in the previous year for other infections.
- People who share saunas or bathtubs that have not been disinfected.
- Athletes who acquire MRSA from skin-to-skin contact or contact with contaminated mats or exercise equipment.
- People who share personal items without frequent cleaning.
- People who are colonized with MRSA in the front part of the nose.

An active MRSA infection usually starts as a small sore. The sore often develops into a large painful boil that drains pus. Occasionally the infection involves more than one spot. If left untreated, the infection can enter the blood stream and cause a serious life threatening illness called septic shock.

MRSA can be prevented by taking a few simple precautions:

- Clean potentially contaminated surfaces, like sauna benches or bathtubs, with a dilute bleach solution.
- · Wash your hands with soap and water, especially after using public exercise equipment.
- Avoid using leftover antibiotics or over-the-counter skin infection treatments without consulting your doctor. Common over-the-counter antibiotic ointments and most oral antibiotics do not kill MRSA, and taking antibiotics indiscriminately increases your risk for contracting a resistant bacteria.

- Do not share personal items like razors, unwashed towels, athletic uniforms, or clothing with others.
- Cover skin wounds with a bandage to prevent further infection.

Treatment of MRSA infections requires very specific antibiotics and frequently requires incision and drainage of infected wounds for proper healing. See your doctor if you or a family member has a skin infection that suddenly worsens or fails to respond to firstaid treatments.

Saying It Sincerely

By Pastor Mike Christian River of Life Assembly of God for the Nome Ministerial Association "Glory in the Lord!"

"Let him that glorieth glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth me."

"Non-Christian people glory in three things: wisdom, strength and power. But the Bible says, "But let him that glorieth glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth me, that I am the Lord which exercises loving kindness, judgment, and righteousness, in the earth: for in these things I delight, saith the Lord." (Jeremiah 9:24)

The three things God delights in are: love, fairness, and holiness.

The great question of life is: "What are you seeking most?" Are you seeking the world's system (money, strength, power) or God's Kingdom (love, fairness, holiness)?

This should not confuse you, but in some ways it is possible to seek both – if your motives are right. The Bible says, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom" (Psalm 111:10). You should seek to be as wise as possible, acknowledging God as the source.

It is also true that your body is the temple of God (so you should keep it in shape), and wealth is a means of spreading the Gospel throughout the world.

However, these things are not an end in themselves but a means of serving God. The true perspective is to seek love, fairness and holiness, and then when you're fully committed, use your wisdom, strength and wealth to serve God. As Jesus said, "You cannot serve God and mammon" (Matthew 6:24) but you should seek to serve God WITH mammon.

Best of all, you should delight in knowing the Lord – that you're his child, and part of his kingdom. There's an old statement that says "If God has you into his work – don't back slide to become a king."

Today you have a chance to accomplish eternal good. As you minister to the needs of others, rejoice! You're wealthier than a billionaire because you know the Lord and he knows you!

Remember to "Glory in the Lord!" Further Reading: Psalm 145:11; 149:5; Proverbs 3:35; Jeremiah 9:23

Elda were married in 1945 while he was stationed in Washington, D.C. After his discharge, he began a lifelong adventure with his new wife, moving the young Detroit City girl to his hometown. He then moved to Fairbanks in 1947, where his first son Daniel, Jr. was born. He was also a proud graduate in mining engineering of the University of Alaska in 1949. Dan returned to Nome, where his daughter Cynthia was born. Looking for a more varied mining experience, he moved to Bishop, California, and then on to Reno, Nevada, where he began a 30-year career with the Bureau of Land Management. While in Reno, Nathan, "Mom's Little Jackpot," was born. In an effort to advance his career, Dan relocated the family to Washington, DC where his expertise on Alaska issues was recognized, and he was transferred to Fairbanks for the arrival of statehood. It was there that the baby of the family, Amy was born. After serving as the land office manager for four years, Dan moved the family to Anchorage. He helped auction off the valuable oil leases on the North Slope of Alaska and then took a new assignment in Salt Lake City, Utah. Dan became an expert in abandoned mined lands reclamation and further transfers followed. They moved back to Washington, DC, Kansas City, Missouri, and Springfield, Illinois, where while working under the Reagan administration, he decided that retirement would be a viable option to the new regressive environmental policies.

ventures in life with a short stint in Anchorage and Edmonds, Washington. They finally settled into the longest stay of their marriage, 10 years, when they took up residence in Vancouver, Washington. The final leg of his life adventure was to Austin, Texas, in order to be closer to family after the love of his life, Elda, died in 2009.

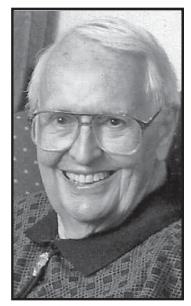

Dan was extremely social and enjoyed talking about his children, grandchildren, Alaska, geology, history, politics and the makings of his favorite libation. He was also a member of the Alaska Pioneers Igloo number 4; the Alaska Yukon Pioneers; American Institute of Mining, Metallurgical, and Petroleum Engineers; and the National Active and Retired Federal Employees Association.

Dan is survived by his four children: Daniel, Jr. and his wife Allison Grader of Reston, Virginia; Cynthia and her husband Michael Solich of Denver, Colorado; Nathan of Fairbanks; and Amy with her husband Scott Jeffress of Spicewood, Texas; his grandchildren: Madeline Grader-Jones, Nikolos Solich, Danielle Solich, Schuyler Jeffress and Jude Jeffress, as well as numerous nieces, nephews and their children.

It is conceivable that Dan could have chosen an easier, more secure path in life, but that was not his way. Those who shared in his journey will be ever thankful for the vistas and experiences he provided.

Donations to celebrate his life can

State of Alaska
Department of Natural Resources
Division of Mining, Land and Water
Public Notice Under AS 38.05.945
Preliminary Decision:

Nome Offshore Lease Sale for Locatable Minerals

The Division of Mining, Land and Water (DMLW) has written a preliminary decision under AS 38.05.035(e) to hold an offshore lease sale for locatable minerals under AS 38.05.250 for tide and submerged lands offshore of Nome, Alaska. The area of the sale will extend a distance of 17.5 miles from approximately the mouth of the Nome River (Section 5, T12S, R33W, KRM) westward to Rodney Creek (Section 15, T11 S, R36W, KRM), and from mean high tide seaward to the three-mile limit of Alaska state waters. The proposed sale area covers some 52.5 square miles, or approximately 33,600 acres. Not all of the acreage will be leased. An estimated 20,000 acres will be leased in parcels ranging from 40 acres to approximately 3,500 acres. Leases within 3/4 mile of mean high tide will be from about 40 to 160 acres in size. Land farther from shore will be broken into larger leases. Leases up to 160 acres in size will be offered through an outcry auction. Leases larger than 160 acres will be offered through a sealed bid process. Existing mineral rights will not be affected by this lease sale.

The DNR has not yet determined which of the proposed lease tracts will actually be offered for auction. Most or all of the nearshore tracts will be

Investigation revealed Martin, who was intoxicated, was firing a .22 caliber pistol at the snow in the direction of his neighbor's house. Another neighbor took the gun from Martin while Martin was reloading and Martin was subsequently arrested for Misconduct Involving Weapons IV. A records check revealed Martin is a convicted felon, having been convicted of felony Theft II on April 11. Martin was subsequently charged with Misconduct Involving Weapons III and transported to Nome where he was lodged at Anvil Mountain Correctional Cen-

Kulowiyi had consumed alcohol in violation of her conditions of release and probation. Investigation also determined that L. Kulowiyi was involved in an altercation with another female in Savoonga. L. Kulowiyi was transported and remanded to AMCC in Nome.

On April 20, at about 9:15 a.m., Nome AST received a complaint from a Teller resident who reported her snowmachine was hit by another snowmachine driven by an intoxicated Stanley Milligrock. Stanley Milligrock, 42, of Teller, was arrested for Driving Under the Influence and transported to Nome and lodged at AMCC.

offered. However, not all of the larger tracts farther offshore will be included in this sale. During the 2011 mining season miners will be permitted to prospect on tide and submerged lands not currently under lease within the proposed sale area. Those miners who prospect farther offshore are encouraged to contact the DMLW to propose that promising tracts be offered for lease. The contact information given below may be used to recommend tracts for the sale. The DNR will use this and other information in determining which tracts to offer.

This preliminary decision is to determine whether conducting a competitive sale for mining leases offshore of Nome is in the best interest of the State. A lease for locatable minerals grants the lessee the exclusive right of possession and extraction of the minerals under AS 38.05.185-AS 38.05.275. The lease does not confer any permit to actually explore for or mine minerals. Exploration and mining activities will be subject to permitting by the Department of Natural Resources and other government agencies, including the Alaska Departments of Fish and Game and Environmental Conservation, and the U. S. Army Corp of Engineers. All activities will also be subject to coastal consistency review under the Alaska of Engineers. All activities will also be subject to coastal Consistency review under the Alaska Coastal Management Program.

The budget assumes the utility will be paying around $4 per gallon-landed-for diesel fuel to run its two 5.2 MW generators when the barge comes in this fall. The $4 oil will mix with 600,000 gallons of diesel the utility has in storage that bring the averaged price near $3.66 a gallon. Still, NJUS would have to consider raising the fuel surcharge on each kilowatt by 10.34 cents, currently at 16.38 cents, predicted Utility Manager John K. Handeland. This translates to ratepayers using an average of 750 kilowatt hours monthly seeing the electric bill go up about $50. Some of the cost increase would be reduced with the application of state Power Cost Equalization funds that apply to the first 500 kW.

The business plan was to come up for a vote at an April 26 NJUS board meeting. Once passed by that panel, it will go before Nome Common Council. Major factors in planning are fuel costs and employee wages, Handeland said.

The figures from 2010 were positive, looking at projections with revenues up and expenses down. Additional revenue came from equipment rentals to construction projects and the utility was able to use regular employees on some grant-paid projects resulting in a savings.

NJUS administration thinks revenues will be down in the 2011 plan because of ratepayers mindful of power costs and the use of energy conservation in the community.

"People are more aware of not leaving the lights on and trying to reduce electrical energy use," Handeland said.

Rock Creek Mine is being phased out, but the New Hospital turning on the power will balance out loss of the mine load. The plan assumes a full staff, but Handeland anticipates projects will pay some wages. Labor agreements not quite set in stone show a three-percent annual wage adjustment and some increases to insurance and pension trusts.

In other conversation, Handeland, reported that ground under the diesel fuel supply tanks on the hill above the port had been stabilized. Sun shining on the permafrost under the southwest corner of the tank farm had caused a problem beneath the containment structure of a tank, Handeland said. Repairs were made in the fall. Until another long-term solution, the utility plans to install flexible couplings between the tanks and underground piping network to allow settling or heaving to happen without compromising the system.

"Significant areas of uneven thawing caused fissures in the ground that needed to be filled," he said. "It took $200,000 in repairs to fill and compact the ground, and then reattach the containment to the containment membrane to assure integrity and stability."

Utility staff is researching an idea to switch around or sell some generators to save $100,000. They could sell two generators, #9 and #11, that can no longer operate under NJUS air permits. They are also investigating the connection of #12 generator to the new power plant switchgear and evaluating whether to move or dispose of #14 generator and purchase some smaller units. NJUS has been keeping generators #9 and #11 in heated storage, now turned off.

"We are saving money by not spending money," Handeland said. Board member Carl Emmons agreed.

'If you cut costs, it's as good as adding free energy," he said.

Handeland said that when the cost of the August fuel purchase is known, NJUS will have a budget session for tweaking the business plan if necessary.

size of the budget - originally the Senate proposed a $2.9 billion budget—and contingency language that tied all energy projects together. They proposed to have the Alaska Energy Authority properly vet all energy projects listed in the Capital budget. They offered to remove the $150 per barrel trigger on the governor's proposed $100 million in road maintenance projects and the removal of $200 in deferred school maintenance costs at the request of the House. Paul LaBolle, Rep. Neal Foster's adviser, said that those school maintenance projects were mostly not even shovel-ready. The Senate passed out a new version of the budget that would total $2.68 billion, $185 million less than the Senate's previous proposal. This would allow House Representatives to add a few more projects to the capital

The governor had requested a capital budget spending cap at $2.8 billion. Almost $1.8 billion of the projects in the budget come from the governor's proposed budget, while the Senate added less than one half of that amount at $734 million.

Senate President Gary Stevens (R-Kodiak) sent a letter to Parnell on late Thursday. The letter was signed by all Senators but Lesil McGuire and Tom Wagoner, who were out of town. Stevens wrote that it is the Senate Majority's position "that a large part of the current stalemate is the result of your connecting support of the oil tax cuts contained in House Bill 110 and Senate Bill 49 with the Capital Budget." Senators said that a careful and thoughtful look into the entire tax structure, including Alaska's generous tax credits, is warranted.

"The 2011 session commenced with your aggressive position that the oil tax cuts pass, or else," wrote Stevens. "You have explicitly indicated that budget vetoes would occur if oil tax cuts were not passed. The Senate Majority respectfully has not acquiesced to your position." Senators answered to the threat that Governor Parnell veto energy projects not on their merit but on whether or not the Senator supported his oil tax reduction bill.

Although the oil tax bill is not even up for discussion anymore – it passed the House but not the Senate – the fear of repercussions run deep in the Senate.

Senator Donny Olson (D-Nome) said the Senate majority stands together and are working with the House on fine-tuning the capital budget, but as of press time on Monday nothing had moved toward resolution. Olson repeated that the threat of Governor Parnell to veto line items in the capital budget prompted the Senate to build in safeguards to prevent this from happening. One of those safeguards is contingency language in Section 36 of the capital budget that binds together all energy projects described in Section 4 so that Parnell cannot line item projects.

The new section added last weekend is titled non-severability and means that if the contingency section were to be found invalid, then all energy projects would be null and void. AP reports that the governor intends to challenge the contingency language with his line-item veto power.

Section four of the capital budget describes all energy projects statewide, including solar wind and geothermal studies, transmission lines, and turbine designs. For the Nome and the Bering Strait region, it includes a $1.3 million geothermal assessment for Pilgrim Hot Springs by the UAF Center for Energy and Power, a Kotzebue paper and wood waste to energy study of $85,000; Stebbins, Elim and Koyuk wind feasibility studies, statewide weatherization and home energy rebate programs totaling $51.5 million and $65.7 million, for further studies on the Susitna hydro project, championed by the Governor.

Another bill of importance that has not seen much progress is the extension on the Alaska coastal zone management program that could sunset on July 1 if the Legislature does not pass it out this session. The bill passed the House, and is now before the Senate. It was scheduled to be in the Senate's finance committee, but was not heard.

CNN polls says support for offshore drilling on the rise

A year after the Deepwater Horizon platform in the Gulf of Mexico exploded, killing 11 people and causing the nation's worst oil spill by releasing 200 million gallons of oil in the ocean, a poll found that people support offshore oil drilling again. A CNN Opinion Research Corporation survey found that 56 percent of Democrats favor more offshore drilling, compared to 70 percent of independents and 86 percent of Republicans. Sixty-nine percent of Americans favor increased offshore drilling, with just over three in ten opposed. That 69 percent is up 20 points from last June, while the oil spill was still in progress, and is back to the level of support seen in the summer of 2008. Fifty-seven percent of those questioned say they are not confident that the federal government can prevent another oil spill as big as the one last year, with four in ten saying they are confident that the government can avoid another disaster.

LNG facility to keep operating

ConocoPhillips and Marathon Oil said they would extend operations at the Kenai Liquefied Natural Gas plant through early August in order to supply four additional LNG cargos to Asia. On February 10 the companies announced that the plant would cease its export operations as early as April. ConocoPhillips and Marathon Oil said that this extension of export operations does not affect its earlier decision to eventually mothball the plant.

Eight Nome residents arrested on drug sales and possession

By Sandra L. Medearis

Following a lengthy investigation that is ongoing, Alaska State Troopers have nabbed eight people on charges of possessing and distributing the prescription pain reliever oxycodone. Members of the ring, charged also on conspiracy to violate drug laws have been arraigned and jailed pending bail of $2,500 to $10,000

Troopers made the arrests based on warrants issued on Friday, April 22 after a grand jury handed up the indictments on A Felony misconduct involving a controlled substance. An "A" felony is a more serious charge than a "B" or "C" felony. Conspiring to promote drug sale or distribution is a "B" felony. Upon conviction, most could get additional jail time for allegedly transporting the oxycodone into the state.

Oxycodone, sold under the name of Oxycontin and other brand names, can lead to addiction or dependence requiring more frequent and higher doses to get the "high" similar to that of heroin.

All the people arrested on the drug charges live in Nome. Most were arrested over the weekend of April 23 and 24. An unrelated case is pending out of Nome Police Department as regards a health aide from the Fairbanks-Mountain Village area.

All the following have been charged by the grand jury on two counts each of possessing with intent to deliver oxycodone, according to court documents: Zachary Andrew Nashalook, 27; Rayne Aukongak, 23; Junior "Joe" Jones, 62; Alex William Vaughn, 42; Zonna L. Kunnuk, 32; Steven B. Evans, 32; Dylon

School board approves $11.8 million budget

Sitnasuak funds JROTC

By Laurie McNicholas

Cadets, ten-hut!

The Junior Reserve Officer Training Corps program is a go at Nome-Beltz High School in the next school year, thanks to funding from Sitnasuak Native Corp. The SNC board decided on April 30 to fund the program at $100,000 for the third consecutive year.

Crystal Andersen Booth, SNC's board chair, interim president and chief executive officer, announced the decision on behalf of the SNC board and shareholders at a special meeting of the Nome Board of Education on Monday. She said it is an honor to participate in the program and help future leaders. Thirty-eight cadets are enrolled in JROTC this

All school board members in attendance-Barb Amarok, Betsy Brennan, Gloria Karmun, president, and Marie Tozier-expressed gratitude to SNC for its generous support of the JROTC program. Board member Barb Nickels was excused from the meeting.

The board unanimously approved the NPS general fund budget of $11.8 million for FY 12. The FY 12 budget was scheduled for approval at a special school board meeting on April 29, but the meeting was postponed pending Sitnasuak's decision whether to fund the JROTC program for next year.

The NPS developed the FY 12 budget with an enrollment projection of 660 students, including six intensive special education students and 14 Extension students. The budget includes the following revenues from major sources.

• $7.6 million in state foundation

• A requested contribution from the City of Nome that includes the required 4 mills of $989,747, plus an additional contribution of $874,000. The additional request is an increase of $82,326 from FY 11, but is $1.2 million below the maximum local contribution allowed.

• $273,789 from the fund balance; and

• $100,000 in FY 11 under budget savings.

The general fund balance will drop from $1,697,328 million in FY 11 to $1,423,539 million in FY 12. The last time the NPS general fund showed a decrease was in FY 07

During a school board work session on April 29, NPS Business Manager Cathy Wojtanek explained why NPS will need $273,789 from the general fund to balance the FY 12 budget. She said she learned on brutality.

Cable television Internet sites streamed videos of cheering crowds waving American flags from New York's Times Square and cheering throngs tooting car horns and trumpets outside the steel fence around the White House all night long. Hundreds of others gathered at the World Trade Center site to celebrate the news. Crowds chanted "USA, USA" and "Yes we did!"

Just after midnight East Coast time, five White House officials held a press background briefing conference call that the Nugget attended.

Speaking on background basis, a top U.S. White House official said bin Laden had resisted but had died in a "firefight," without providing further details surrounding bin Laden's death. Other reports said he had been shot in the head. One of his adult sons was believed to have died with him. According to officials, a woman died being used by a man as a human shield; two women were injured, and an al Qaeda courier whose trail led intelligence collectors to bin Laden died as well as the courier's brother. There were no U.S. casualties during the 40-minute military and intelligence operation, and no peripheral casualties outside the compound, according to White House officials. One helicopter crashed because of mechanical difficulties, an official said, and was destroyed for security purposes.

U.S. intelligence found the Saudiborn religious zealot bin Laden in a compound at Abbottabad, a town of about 100,000, about 35 miles north of Islamabad, capital of Pakistan.

A senior administration official said that for security reasons, the Obama administration did not share intelligence collected prior to the attack on bin Laden's compound with any other country, including Paktracked the courier to the secured mansion in Abbotabad. They found a mansion with such elaborate security that intelligence concluded it was built to secure a "high interest target." The occupants burned their trash. There were two heavily secured entries.

"It has 12-18 foot walls topped with barbed wire.... Internal walls sectioned off different portions of the compound to provide extra privacy.... The residents of the comistan. Only a handful of people within the U.S. government knew about the attack in advance. However, members of the Pakistani intelligence agency, ISI, were on the scene during the raid, according to network reports that cited Pakistani officials.

A courier raised U.S. intelligence interest years ago. It took four years to learn his real name and two years to find out his area of operations. Last August, according to White House officials, CIA intelligence pound burn their trash, unlike their neighbors, who put the trash out for collection," according to an official at the press briefing.

The three-story compound, at the end of a dirt road, was eight times larger than other residences in the affluent neighborhood favored by retired Pakistani military, according to the press briefing. The terrace at the top had seven-foot privacy walls. Intelligence officers believed that the hilltop compound had been built in 2005 for hiding bin Laden, but did not know how long he had resided there. Observation by satellite and other covert operations pointed to the presence of two families, those of the courier and his brother, plus a third family on the third floor consistent with the family of bin Laden, believed to be living there with the youngest of his wives.

In mid-march, Obama chaired the first of five meetings of the National Security Council, from March 14 to April 29, to plan the move on the Abbotabad compound.

Satisfied that intelligence was sufficient to warrant the attack, Obama gave the go-ahead Friday.

Senior officials at the White House briefing refused to say whether U.S. military performed the raid, but later a U.S. defense official said U.S. Navy SEALs carried out the attack. Monday, the BBC ran an ABC news video on its Web site in which it reported that 30 to 40 Navy SEALS came down ropes onto the roof of the building from helicopters flying in low from Afghanistan.

Bin Laden's body had been buried at sea from an aircraft carrier, following DNA identification, according to official reports.

In the White House briefing, an official said that precautions had been taken to observe Islamic custom and tradition after taking custody of the body. One requirement is burial within 24 hours.

Bin Laden's killing comes at a time when movements for change and toward democratic governments are erupting in the Middle East. Obama affirmed that the United States was not at war against Islam.

"Bin Laden was not a Muslim leader; he was a mass murderer of Muslims. Indeed, al Qaeda has slaughtered scores of Muslims in many countries, including our own. So his demise should be welcomed by all who believe in peace and human dignity," Obama said in his televised statement announcing the killing.

All over but the shouting? Not really. The U.S. State Dept. has issued a warning to Americans traveling or living abroad where there may be anti-American sentiment to be alert.

"Given the uncertainty and volatility of the current situation, U.S. citizens in areas where recent events could cause anti-American violence are strongly urged to limit their travel outside of their homes and hotels and avoid mass gatherings and demonstrations," the warning

Will frisking and scanning at the nation's airports lessen with bin Laden's death or increase to protect against reprisals? Who knows.

'We remain at a heightened state of vigilance, but the Department of Homeland Security does not intend to issue an NTAS alert at this time," said Secretary of Homeland Security Janet Napolitano in a statement.

U.S. Sen. Lisa Murkowski, R-Alaska, issued a statement Sunday: "If a fight is brought to the American people, we will finish it. Tonight we learned Osama bin Laden is dead. The man was behind some of the most inhuman and unprovoked deaths of innocents in generations the worst of which being the hateful 9/11 attacks that killed nearly 3,000 people. His death is a direct result of the determination of America's military and intelligence forces - and it casts a well-deserved spotlight on our men and women who fight in the shadows.

"The lesson here to the world: If a fight is brought to the American people, we will finish it. But it's crucial that the world recognize while the man is gone, the mindlessly violent al-Oaeda movement he led and the hatred he represented are still very much alive," Murkowski said.

Meantime, Sohaib Althar, an information technologist living in Abbotabad tweeted the following at the time of the raid: "A huge window shaking bang here in Abbottabad Cantt. I hope its not the start of something nasty :-S"

Over a Barrel

The price of fuel has been going through the roof and is headed to the moon. We had better get serious about finding a solution to our energy problems. The problems need to be solved and we are the ones who will have to come up with the answers. Time is running out.

Perhaps our isolation in Nome can be used to our advantage. We have everything within our grasp. We have resources, but we need money to develop them. Instead of a $5 billion dam on the Susitna, the State could help us develop gas wells, either on land or offshore. Perhaps Nome Joint Utilities could switch to propane generators and put up recharging stations for battery-powered trucks. Let's stop dragging our feet and get with the wind generation concept, NJU has been just talking about wind for too many years. Now we need to charge ahead full power. We could set up solar energy for charging batteries and heating public buildings.

We are an ingenious and inventive town, and so are all the communities in this area. We need to fix our full attention to solving the energy problem as it relates to us. We are going to have to do it. We can't spend our future chained to an oil barrel. - N.L.M.-

No progress made at special session

Monday marked day 15 of the special session, but no compromise materialized in the continuing gridlock between the House and the Alaska Senate over the capital budget legislation. The House waited for a bill from the Alaska Senate, but nothing came. Work on the FY2012 statewide operating budget also didn't go anywhere due to the absence of both Senate finance committee co-chairs. The House adjourned for the day in the early afternoon following a fiveminute Senate floor session. House leaders held a teleconference with senators and Governor Sean Parnell to address lingering operating budget issues. No resolution was reached on funding the Power Cost Equalization endowment, the governor's scholarship program bill and development of a natural gas pipeline for in-state use.

Attorney General finds contingency language unconstitutional

Legislators heard on Friday attorney general John Burns' legal opinion that the Senate Finance Committee's language tying together numerous appropriation items violates the Alaska Constitution. Burns also noted that tying projects together like this does not protect the important energy projects, but rather makes individual projects more vulnerable to third-party lawsuits. Burns said that because the governor has sworn to uphold the Alaska Constitution, he cannot abandon his constitutionally assigned duty to review and consider all appropriations.

ConocoPhillips posts record earnings

Oil producer ConocoPhillips released its earnings report for the first quarter of 2011, reporting a worldwide net income of $3 billion, a 43 percent increase over its earnings during the same period in 2010. The company's Alaska profits are $549 million between January and March 2011.

State gets ready for response to springtime river flooding

The National Weather Service expects break-up to begin the first week of May. The state Department of Emergency Services flies River Watch teams to observe the Yukon and Kuskokwim river break up and bases their teams in Circle, Galena, St Mary's, Aniak and Bethel. The State Emergency Coordination Center is ready to monitor and support River Watch activities. If flooding becomes imminent, the center will coordinate the state's response effort.

Parnell part of OCS governors coalition

Governor Sean Parnell has joined a coalition of coastal state governors pushing for offshore energy development. The new group is called the Outer Continental Shelf Governors Coalition and includes Parnell and the governors of Louisiana, Texas, Virginia and Mississippi. The governors said in the letter inviting other coastal governors to their alliance that they support policies that "encourage an American energy expansion with all forms of energy production - both onshore and offshore." The announcement was made during an offshore technology conference in Houston, Texas, where DNR commissioner Dan Sullivan was invited to a panel discussion.

Three arrested for illegal ivory trafficking

After a nine-month investigation, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's arrested three people on charges of illegal commercialization of walrus ivory, polar bear hides and other wildlife parts. A federal grand jury in Anchorage indicted Jesse Joseph Leboeuf and Loretta Audrey Sternbach of Glennallen, and Richard Blake Weshenfelder of Anchorage and charged them with a conspiracy involving the commercialization of walrus ivory, polar bears and other marine mammal parts. USFWS seized 1,000 pounds of walrus ivory — more than 150 whole tusks—two polar bear hides, hundreds of other wildlife parts, and more than two dozen firearms including a silencer and fully automatic weapons. Also seized were marijuana plants, coca plants and stolen fine artwork. The marine mammals were purchased from Savoonga and transported to Glennallen. The parts were illegally sold and transported to non-Alaska-Native buyers in Alaska, other states and internationally. The indictment also alleges that Leboeuf and Sternbach paid for the wildlife with cash, drugs, firearms and other items ranging from cigarettes to snowmachines. No arrests have been made in Savoonga. The investigation is ongoing.

State continues to fight feds on "Wild Lands"

Governor Sean Parnell has directed the Department of Law to support a lawsuit against the federal government filed by the State of Utah. Utah filed a complaint against the Bureau of Land Management that targets the federal "Wild Lands" policy. U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ken Salazar created a new public land designation of "Wild Lands," and directed federal agencies to protect the wilderness values of such lands. Parnell said that this puts up hurdles for resource development and thus would be bad policy. The Alaska Department of Law is preparing its own complaint that will include similar causes of action as Utah for not using the required process.

Nome gets airport money

Federal grants awarded to the Nome and Bering Strait area were announced last week and include $1.4 million to inventory and characterize contaminated sites, landfills and unauthorized dumping areas in western and Arctic Alaska. The funding is provided by the Coastal Impact Assistance Program. The Federal Aviation Administration awarded $89,097 to the Nome Airport for runway rehabilitation.

Climber killed in avalanche

A climber died in an avalanche near the Ruth Gorge in the Alaska Range last week. He has been identified as Chris Lackey, 39, of Houston, Texas. The man was with one of two guided parties that were camped overnight on the "Root Canal", a commonly used glacier landing strip and camping area that lies directly south of the Moose's Tooth. A large serac, or column of ice, at the eastern end of the glacier collapsed, shedding ice and snow onto the camp. Both camps were buried in the debris, and everyone was thrown from their tents. The four uninjured climbers were able to get themselves out of the snow and ice and attend to Lackey, who was found to be unconscious and barely breathing.

Lackey died from his injuries.

Lott, 22; Tudor U. Wheeler, 29.

Count one is "knowingly possessed with intent to deliver or delivered a schedule IA controlled substance, Oxycocone." The second count deals with conspiring and promoting MISC with one or more persons. Lott has not been charged on conspiracy, according to court documents. Nashalook, Jones, Kunnuk and Aukongak are facing three related counts in all. Some defendants have additional charges, and most, if convicted, could face jail time beyond the presumptive sentence because of aggravating circumstances, added to the charges on April 27.

These aggravating factors that would affect sentencing on conviction are as follows:

Nashalook was on release for another felony charge or conviction or for a misdemeanor charge or conviction having assault as a necessary element. Additionally, Nashalook was caring for or assisting in the care of a child less than 10 years of age.

Jones' and Evans' criminal conduct was designed to obtain substantial pecuniary gain and the risk of prosecution and punishment for the conduct is light. The two have additional aggravating factors listed, as a series of criminal offences were committed in furtherance of business activities and commercial enterprise from which the defendant derived a major portion of the defendant's income. Five are on the aggravating factors list from court records for bringing drugs into Alaska.

Class A felonies under Alaska Statutes characteristically involve conduct resulting in serious physical injury or substantial risk of serious injury to a person.

Users abuse highly addictive oxycodone-containing tablets in three ways: crushing and snorting the powder, chewing it, or dissolving it in water and "shooting" the solution. These methods defeat the time-release mechanism of most forms of the drug and produce an immediately euphoric high.

Street names for oxycodone— Oxycontin are "oxy," "kickers," "blue," "Hill Billy heroin," and "getting Jammed."

"Mum's" the word from AST because the investigation is ongoing. The next appearance in court for the defendants is in mid-May. This week, defendant court records were being passed around to find enough public defenders to handle the large number of the accused. So far, the number of attorneys available through the Nome office of public defenders and the Office of Public Advocacy has been exhausted, according to a local court official. One attorney cannot defend more than one person in the related cases due to conflicts of interest.

Mountain Village woman charged on selling drugs

By Sandra L. Medearis

Sonja Rubke, 29, has been charged on two Class A felony counts of manufacture or delivery of a controlled substance, the prescription pain-killer oxycodone, based on illegal activity in Nome during a visit in 2010, according to the charging document.

Rubke, who resides in the Mountain Village-Fairbanks area, has been summoned to appear in court next month for arraignment.

According to court documents, Felony A charges stem from an investigation by Sgt. Preston Stotts of Nome Police Dept. Stotts obtained statements from Ida Sockpick that Rubke gave her a class IA substance, prescription hydrocodone tablets, and later sold several of the pills to Daisy Weinard in her presence. The complaint in court records is based further on statements to Stotts from Gary Swanson that Rubke sold him some tablets and snorted some of the substance with him in his apartment. Later, Stotts interviewed Rubke, who, according to documents signed by Stotts, admitted selling several pills to Weinard and transferring the hydrocodone to Sockpick and Swanson in early April last year.

In other drug action, eight Nome residents have been charged on possession, manufacture or distribution of oxycodone-containing tablets following an intense investigation by law enforcement.

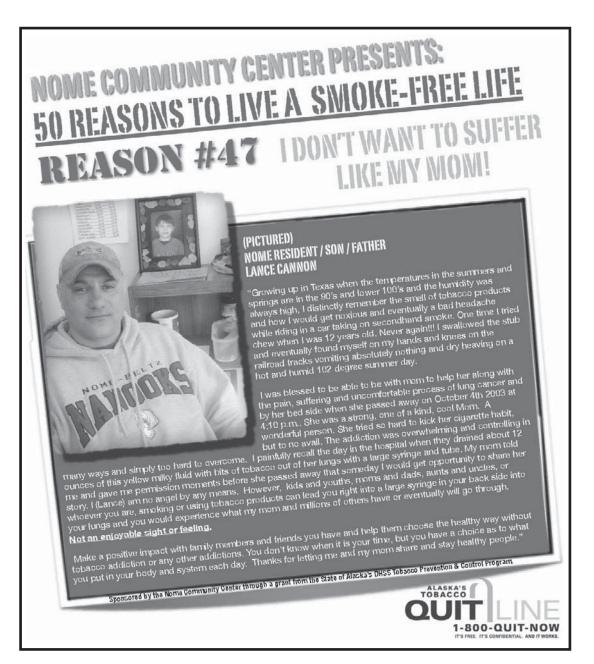

Oxycodone and hydrocodone are addictive and sell under a variety of brand names. Abusers crush the tablets, then snort, inject in solution with water or chew the powder to achieve a "high."

Nome Elementary School ramps up Read 90 program

By Laurie McNicholas

Nome Elementary School is rapidly assembling building blocks for the Read 90 Program. The program aims to achieve a major new goal for 90 percent of third graders to read at or above grade level by the end of the 2014 school year.

Dave Keller, NES principal and special education director outlined initial attempts to develop a Read 90 goal plan at a Nome Board of Education work session on April 26. He said the plan applies some of the strategies that led to remarkable growth in student achievement in the Kennewick School District in Washington State.

Main components of the NES plan include classroom walk-throughs by the principal, a classroom observation checklist called a "focus on learning snapshot," a curriculum mapping plan and schedule, a reading block schedule for students in kindergarten through sixth grade, and curriculum development and training

"The classroom walk-through is a feature of success at Kennewick Schools," Keller said. "Its purpose is not to evaluate teachers but to inform instruction." In a walk-through, a principal can see whether a teacher is using the program as it was designed to be used, he noted. He said feedback from teachers on the walk-through component is positive so far.

Keller gave board members copies of an article titled, "Classroom Observation," which describes how the principal of Palmer Junior Middle School used informal classroom walk-throughs to improve student achievement. The article says walk-throughs enable a principal to systematically compile data on instructional practices, help teachers focus on areas that relate to state standards, facilitate principal-teacher communication and identify training and support teachers may need.

"Classroom Observation" cites research indicating that school districts need to make the purpose of walkthroughs clear and conduct them in an atmosphere of trust if they are to be constructive. The article originally was published in Education Northwest Magazine in 2010 (Vol. 15, No. 3, pp. 14-17).

Keller said dedication to curriculum and a curriculum mapping plan are essential for the program to succeed. He gave board members copies of a schedule that frees up time teachers need to complete their curriculum mapping goal this year. He said roving substitutes will relieve teachers of instructional duties in periods scheduled for curriculum mapping.

"A scheduling committee is working on several schedule scenarios that guarantee 120 minutes of language arts instruction in grades K-6 and optimize our ability to bring additional staff to the task of reading instruction," Keller stated in his written report. "We have been able to create a reading support system that maximizes staff at grades K through 3." Keller distributed copies of a color-coded reading block schedule of 120 minutes per day in grades K-6.

Keller said the orange blocks for grades K-3 represent dedicated reading time supported by staff such as the Title I reading aide. He wants the current math aide reprogrammed to support reading, he added. Keller noted that some students have reading levels so low they can't participate in the Houghton Mifflin reading program.

"A curriculum development team met on several occasions to review alternative curriculum for students (K-3) performing at the intensive and strategic levels," Keller said in his written report. "Reading Mastery was determined to be the preferred replacement curriculum." Special needs students can do Reading Master, he noted. A representative of Reading Masterys publisher McGraw-Hill indicated that one day of training is included in the estimated purchase price of $21,000, Keller added. He said special revenues may be used to purchase the program, and one day of training can be scheduled during an in-service in September.

Keller suggested that NPS purchase a copy of Annual Growth/Catch-up Growth for all staff and board members to establish a common knowledge base.

Wehde addressed the Read 90 training budget item on the work session agenda. He said NPS is comfortably budgeted for all aspects of the program. Jon Berkely, director of federal programs, can provide board members with specific information about special revenues, Wehde noted. Berkeley was not present at the work session.

Upcoming meetings

The Nome Common Council has scheduled a work session on the NPS budget for FY 12 on May 9 at 5:30 p.m. at City Hall.

The Nome Board of Education will conduct a regular meeting on May 10 at 5:30 p.m. and a work session on May 24 at 5:30 p.m. Both meetings will be held in the Nome Elementary School library.

School Board approves budget

April 28 that the district's health insurance costs will jump by 40 percent in FY 12, rather than the anticipated 56.36 percent increase. However, the 40 percent increase will add $216,717 in medical insurance costs to the NPS budget next year. Wojtanek said she received news on April 29 from Utility Manager John Handeland that heating fuel costs will rise to $4 per gallon in FY 12, up from the $3.60 per gallon figure used for budget preparation.

Personnel expenses total $8.6 million in the FY 12 budget, an increase of $94,155 over last year. Other expense increases in next year's budget include student travel, up 10 percent to a total of $161,980; electricity, up 14 percent to $776,340; and property and liability insurance, up 10 percent to $178,198. The budget includes $67,000 to upgrade classroom computers from eMacs to iMacs and for Promethean boards.

The board voted unanimously to continue the contract of Nikki Calabrese-Hodges as a pre-school instructor through the end of the current school year.

Work session topics

Among topics board members discussed at their work session on April 29 were ideas for a "new teachers' experience" to help new teachers learn about Nome and the surrounding natural environment; the junior high school counselor position; a breakfast program for Nome-Beltz High School; and paraprofessional training.

Two ideas were presented for the new teachers' experience. Amarok suggested arranging for 12 teachers and administrators who have worked for NPS for two to four years to learn how to seine and preserve salmon at Tom Gray's camp, which is accessible by boat from Council. The experience would help new staff connect to the land and nature, she noted.

NBHS principal Steve Gast said he has considered three to four days of designated activities involving Nome's culture but also team building, so new teachers will know what kind of community they live in and how best to relate to its kids. "I have teachers who have never been to Council or out to see mountains," he noted. Gast and Amarok pointed out that providing such experiences for new teachers relates to goals in the NPS strategic plan.

Amarok said Gray will provide food, beds, experience in seining and preserving salmon and transportation to and from Council by boat for a group of 12 for five days starting on a Monday at a cost of $15,000. July 12, Aug. 1 and Aug. 15 are available, she added. Amarok said if the event is scheduled to begin Aug. 15, Gray would return the group to Council on Wednesday, Aug. 17 to attend an NPS in-service scheduled Thursday and Friday, Aug. 18-19.

"The idea is wonderful, but $15,000 seems very expensive," Brennan said. "It's of huge value for them. It's part of their job to seek out experiences...." She predicted that the high cost of the camp experience would draw public criticism. Nickels said the public may be confused by the idea and view it as a plan to spend $15,000 to take teachers to camp. Brennan suggested combining some of Amarok's ideas with some of Gast's.

Karmun said she appreciates efforts by Amarok and Gast to use the strategic plan as a guide in developing a new teachers' experience, but

NPS does not have $15,000 to fund the camp proposal. "Can we find funding from Sitnasuak for this?" asked Tozier.

Junior High counselor

Nickels asked Gast whether anyone had indicated interest in the Junior High School counseling position at the job fair.

"One person," replied Gast. He said a counselor needs to work with kids, not push paper for the principal. Gast also said it is his job to ask counselors questions such as: How many kids did you see this week? What are you doing for the kids to help them make progress?

Breakfast program at NBHS

Board members want to provide a breakfast program for high school students. NPS Superintendent Jon Wehde said he will provide them with information, but was unable to do so in time for the meeting.

"With federal funds come federal standards," noted Brennan. She said she hopes students will be provided healthy foods, not junk. "I don't want pre-made things," she added. Wehde said things are changing fast, and breaded products such as chicken nuggets that were served in schools for years are off the list.

Nome Elementary School works with Nome Eskimo Community to provide breakfast snacks for students, noted Dave Keller, NES principal and director of special education. "A fruit breakfast bar is nutritionally appropriate," he said.

Paraprofessional training

Paraprofessional training takes varied shapes and forms, Wehde noted. He said training is most intense for special education aides and is monitored by Sandy Harvey, special education coordinator, and Keller.

Keller said a state mandated training model is used for SPED aides, and they receive individual training in working with a child for whom they are responsible. The NES no longer has pod aides, he added. He said reading support staff will receive training in reading and language.

Wehde said staff are gathering a lot of input and asking what funds to use to develop a training program for support staff. "We need an associate degree for every support staff in the building," he added.

Business of clean energy brings national experts to Anchorage

By Diana Haecker

The third conference on "The Business of Clean Energy" organized by the Renewable Energy Alaska Project brought together an illustrious crowd of clean energy experts from all across the nation. For two days sellers of wind turbines, solar panels and ocean hydro turbines mingled with policy makers, consultants and state and federal government officials with one thing in common: how to turn a society and economy based on burning fossil fuels to embrace the so-called new energy economy, driven by clean and renewable energy. While panel discussions included useful information regarding residential home and weatherization tips, the bulk of the conference was geared to present information how other states deal with their energy predicaments and again included the strong recommendation that Alaskans should take advantage of the state's wealth in terms of money, human and intellectual resources to overcome the state's unique energy problems and export those solutions to other states and even other countries. Nomeites attend

The conference took place last week in Anchorage with a few Nomeites in attendance. Mitch Erickson, executive director of the Nome Chamber of Commerce, Jerald Brown with Bering Straits Native Corporation as well as NACTEC distance learning specialist Nathan Pitt were on hand to hear about the latest and greatest in the clean energy business. Pitt manned a booth showing NACTEC's new renewable energy courses that are offered to the region's youth to learn about job opportunities in the business of clean energy. Brown and Megs Testarmata showed products and services of the Bering Straits Development Company specializing in the distribution and installation of energy saving products.

A theme running throughout the presentations held in the conference rooms was the message of conservation and of the truism that new technologies need a support system of government policies to be successful. As an example for this, Jes Christensen, a managing director with the Danish board of district heating spoke of the Danish model of solar and thermal heating districts. This allowed the Danish to reduce their CO2 emissions, control costs, the utilities are run as cooperatives and are viewed as the European showcase model for energy efficiency.

REAP executive director Chris Rose said that the conference focuses on building the business case for clean energy and furthering the argument that renewable energy development is a way to stabilize the economy that so far depends on volatile fossil fuel prices and to create jobs.

Green building economical

Green building expert Jerry Yudelson of Arizona gave a keynote address, saying that building green makes not only good policy but also makes economic sense. Yudelson said that across the country there is a trend toward net zero energy use buildings. Defining green building by their water and energy efficiency and also by lighting, air quality and "human-friendly" design, Yudelson said that building green office buildings is not only controlling CO2 production, but also has significant benefits and is cost effective. Building 'green' costs only 2 percent more than a regular building, but studies have found that workers in a LEED certified building tend to be 55 percent more productive.

"This also results in a higher retention rate when people like to go to where they work," Yudelson said. He added that the green building market is a growing market despite the recession. In the next 30 years, he said, about 50 million square feet of old houses or living spaces need to be demolished, and that leaves room for green building opportunities. Developers building malls, office buildings and retrofitting existing buildings recognize that green building is smart because it saves money. The business case revolves around savings, marketing and PR advantages, recruitment and retention which all improves the bottom line. "Smart people who are signing the checks and are judged by the results they deliver, they go in that [green] direction," said Yudelson. "I look at all these entrepreneurs and real estate developers and they invest in green building because they will attract better tenants and make more money." In more temperate climates, the big word is the zero net energy building, Yudelson said that the next big thing would be the design of smart cities, designed for green buildings and green transportation systems.

Reduce energy consumption

Energy and housing specialist with the Corporate Extension Service at UAF, Rich Seifert doubts that a zero net energy house would be possible in Alaska, but believes that minimizing energy consumption is within reach. Seifert held a presentation on solar thermal and passive solar use in building designs. His prescription for building in Alaska is a combination of superinsulated building, modern windows and solar use. "The real answer is to conserve and maximize insulation while at the same time provide good ventilation and add south facing windows with a roof overhang," he said.

Seifert said the state could do more to encourage weatherization, as those programs are mostly taken advantage of in urban areas. He said the weatherization programs have so far only affected 5 percent of Alaskan homes. "The program is maxed out, there are not enough people to do the work and there are not enough qualified workers in Alaska to do the work," Seifert said. He said that the state could help in every aspect. "We need to stimulate the work force. In Alaska, about 20 percent of houses should be dumped because they were inadequately built. This gets into health issues and real health insurance would be to put people in well built homes," he said. He said a priority should be to fix windows and ventilation systems,;instead people just super-insulate their homes without fixing humidity control and their inefficient windows.

Seifert said that conserving energy is still the way to go and that exactly was the motto of RurALCap when they started their EnergyWise program last year. Ellen Kazary with the energy efficiency program of RurALCap said that education is a big part of the battle to rein in energy consumption. In 2010 RurALcap launched a program to reduce energy consumption and educate people on simple ways to save energy. She said that weatherization works fine in urban areas, but in villages, it's a bigger challenge. "What can we do to save energy that is otherwise wasted?" she asked. They went into 160 villages, trained local energy crews and sent them to 2,000 households for an intense 8-hour long energy audit of their homes and appliances. "We were not going for the high cost weatherization. We had about $300 worth of supplies or materials per household that could make a difference." Such were window film, energy meters to test energy consumption of appliances, compact fluorescent light bulbs and door sweeps, among other supplies. For each participating household they gathered the data how much energy each appliance consumes. When residents found out that leaving the coffeemaker on all the time equals a waste of $750 per year, they turned off the appliance in a hurry.

People liked the window film, they replaced their regular light bulbs with compact fluorescent light bulbs and installed door sweeps to seal drafty gaps in doors. Little things like cleaning refrigerator quills and insulating around light switches and outlets, dressing the water heater with a special blanket don't sound like they make a big difference, but they do. "Those savings do add up," Kazary says. She reported that the RurAL-Cap EnergyWise sweep was a success because follow up visits after four months showed that 86 percent of the people did change their ways and still practice conservation.

Holmes Hummel, a senior policy advisor in the U.S. Dept. of Energy gave the rundown on the federal side of pushing for clean energy. She said that the DoE made a specific commitment to Alaska and dispatched a full time scientist to Alaska, Brian Hirsch with the National Renewable Energy office. She outlined federal programs to bolster clean energy technologies, inventions and such. She said that state policies are vital to help clean energy markets to succeed. "Markets in other states could greatly benefit from Alaskan technologies," said Hummel. She pointed to webportals set up by DoE that show business opportunities to sell to other states and countries.

You have to jump in the market on developing clean energy technology. There is an abundance of state and federal support for this," she urged Alaskan business owners. She made clear that states could greatly influence whether they will forge ahead or are left behind. Colorado, for example, is transitioning from coal to clean energy, and attracts green industries and with that jobs because of the state's foresight to develop a public policy making clean energy a major goal. Anne Margolis from Vermont pointed out that Alaska is part of the Clean Energy States Alliance, a multi-state coalition. "States are in the driver's seat. You in Alaska have a lot of funds and opportunities compared to other states," she said.

State Senator Lesil McGuire said that there had been a steep learning curve, because 12 years ago when she first got into the legislature, the state was not ready to hear clean energy arguments because it defined itself as a hydro-carbon state. "Hydro carbons are part of our future, but so are renewable energy sources," McGuire told the audience. She pointed to the state's commitment set in policy a few years ago that aims to get 50 percent of its energy from renewables by the year 2025. In light of the current tension between the State House and the Senate over energy projects and language that bundles them together, McGuire defended the current four renewable energy programs that the state administers.

"Of all the programs, the home weatherization and rebate program is the one program where people see the most benefit directly from the government," McGuire said. The Alaska Housing Finance Corporation lends money for energy improvements for state facilities, schools, university and other public facilities. There is an alternative energy loan fund for businesses and finally the state supports a renewable energy grant fund to invest in technology research and bring renewable energy projects online. Although the legislature passed a bill in 2008 that would guarantee funding this for at least five years at $50 million a year, the governor slashed it in half in 2009 and again in 2010.

Commenting on the current gridlock between House and Senate, McGuire told delegates, "It's not about the Senate going on a spending spree, but recognizing where good government is working, and it's working in these programs." She said that the debate centers around regional balance and that no area of Alaska is left out. "It's about regional balance and that we rise or fall together," she said.

Ethan Berkowitz also attended the conference and commented that the state needs to do a better job at allowing clean energy to flow into the grid. "This state has tremendous resources to solve the problems, but because of inadequate policies, those projects don't go anywhere," he said.

"There are regulatory impediments, like the independent power producers don't know what the rules are."

Public Policy Matters

As an example how policy can create the momentum it takes for clean energy to not only power people's homes but also jumpstart the economy, the former governor of Colorado, Bill Ritter, said that by developing a public policy that tied the environment, energy and economic development together, Colorado saw an influx of investors who chose Colorado as the manufacturing place for windmills and solar panels.

"Public policy absolutely matters," Ritter said. Ritter said that by developing an eco-system that supports the use, generation and fostering of clean energy, attracted companies from abroad to invest in the state. The Danish windmill company "Vesta" built four manufacturing plants in Colorado and the German company SMA created 700 jobs in Colorado when they based their solar panel manufacturing plant in the state.

"When I asked them why they chose Colorado over other states, they said that through its policies, the state committed to support clean energy." While coal is still a large part of Colorado's energy portfolio, solar, wind and natural gas are on the rise. Interestingly, Ritter said that although Colorado does have some hydro generated electricity, the state decided not to include hydro in its energy portfolio. "We have enough wind and solar and we didn't want to get involved in the long fights associated with large hydro projects," he said.

Conclusions for successful energy policy with ramifications in labor and workforce development, education, jobs, environmental and human health as well as sustainability of a state require a unified state policy with all stakeholders including utilities and residents on board, said Ritter.

TOP HONOR — Marjorie Tahbone was crowned Miss Indian World on Saturday at the Gathering of Nations Powwow in Albuquerque, NM.

By Diana Haecker

"I never imaged myself coming this far," said an overwhelmed Marjorie Tahbone after she was crowned Miss Indian World at the Gathering of Nations Powwow in Albuquerque, New Mexico last Saturday. The 22-year-old UAF student competed with 24 other contestants from tribes all across the nation and Canada, including Elizabeth Rexford from Anchorage. "It still hasn't sunk in quite yet," said Tahbone in a phone interview with The Nome Nugget from Fairbanks. "I was shocked when they announced my name as the win-Miss Indian World is a Native American pageant held since 1983 in Albuquerque, where indigenous, young women from all over North America compete for the title. The contestants are judged over five days. Points accumulated from a traditional talent presentation, public speaking, private interviews with judges and a dance competition determine the winner in the end. Tahbone won the talent presentation in which she showed the one-foot high kick and the one-arm reach. In front of a huge powwow crowd of thousands of people, she had to answer the question what she does in everyday life that represents her tribal and traditional lifestyle. The answer was limited to a one-minute speech, in which Tahbone said that she on a daily basis is involved in various Inupiaq or Native Alaskan groups as a member of the Inupiaq dance group in Fairbanks, member of the Alaska Native Science and Engineering program and National Native American science society, AFN and the Youth and Elders conference

In a different part of the contest she had to perform Eskimo dance motions to the beat of a powwow song. "Every contestant performed their tribal dances to the pow wow music," Tahbone explained. "It was a close competition," Tahbone said about the overall contest. She won by 60 points with a total score of 1,360.

Being Miss Indian World now may postpone her graduation plans for this spring. Tahbone said she has a busy year ahead of her filled with travels around North America, to different countries and the commitment to speak at powwows. Tahbone has to relinquish her Miss World Eskimo Indian Olympics title and the Miss ANB title to fully commit her time to reign as Miss Indian World.

"I take the title with a lot of respect and honor, and I am very excited to be the ambassador of our culture," she said. She said that she would like to emphasize the importance of education, especially of rural youth. "We don't feel comfortable outside the security of our bubble in our small town," Tahbone said. "I stepped out of my bubble and out of my comfort zone and it prepared me for this." Tahbone said that she had never had a problem addressing large crowds or being put in the spotlight. Whether it may have been running a pep assembly at school or emceeing events in Nome, Marjorie Tahbone said, all of that prepared her for her position

She credits her family and the community of Nome for the support that allowed her to rise to the place she finds herself in. "I had a lot of support from my family, and all of Nome," she said. "I really want to thank the community of Nome that helped with fundraising to get me to New Mexico and lend me support. Without that support I would've not made it this far. And this is not just for this year, but all the years when I was participating in different events and Nome people were always giving me feedback. Whenever I was speaking too slow or too fast, they'd let me know," she said.

Marjorie Tahbone is a student of Alaska Native Studies with a minor in Inupiaq at the University of Alaska Fairbanks. After this semester, she will be able to come home to Nome for a short time before she'll start her Miss Indian World reign by going on the four-day ocean cruise to the Bahamas - a trip that she won as Miss Indian World.

"The Silence" breaks the floodgates of grief

By Diana Haecker

The courage of one woman who broke the silence of clergy sexual abuse almost a decade ago was celebrated last week after the screening of the PBS documentary "The Silence" at the Beartooth Theater in Anchorage. The film shed light on the sexual abuse of nearly a whole generation of children in St. Michael by Catholic priest George Endal and church worker Joseph Lundowski in the late 1960s and 1970s. Anchorage-born film maker Tom Curran made the 30-minute documentary last year and filmed victims of the abuse, now grown-ups, documenting their feelings of lifelong pain and shame and the inability to cope with the reality of having been raped by "holy men" and having nobody to turn to, as even their parents didn't believe their children when they tried to tell them. The film then accompanies Catholic Bishop Donald Kettler on his mission to hold face-to-face meetings with adults that were abused as children.

"The Silence" features Elsie Boudreau, as she was the first of the Alaskan victims to come forward to confront the Catholic church about the sexual abuse she suffered as a child at the hands of former Nome priest Jim Poole. After Boudreau made the abuse public, almost 300 victims of clergy sex abuse came forward with civil claims, which forced the Diocese of Fairbanks to declare bankruptcy. As part of the bankruptcy plan and agreed settlements with the victims, Bishop Kettler who first denied that any such thing could be possible in the church agreed to personally apologize to the victims. The film culminates in the scenes where Kettler comes face to face with the unfathomable pain suffered by the survivors. After the film, trauma therapist Dr. Gretchen Schmelzer compared the trauma of child abuse to being hit by a car every day of their lives for decades.

The panel discussion that followed the theatrical screening turned into confessions of women and men alike who stepped in front of the microphone from the audience, breaking their silences. The panel was supposed to field questions; instead they gave comfort to victims who purged their secrets. Among those was Diane Benson, who identified herself as a survivor of child sexual abuse and rape. She said that even when she went to the police, they were of no help and even made derogatory remarks. She said that it's hard for people to understand what it means to grow up with the uncertainty and fearing for your life on a daily basis. "I am 56 years old and still recovering," Benson said. She thanked Boudreau for leading the way in breaking the silence and helping others to break theirs to allow for healing to happen. For an hour, person after person got their turn at the microphone, lauding Elsie Boudreau as the trail breaker, the silence breaker and then telling their own story. Rita Blumenstein, a Yupik elder from Nelson Island said, "Elsie opened the universe to our hidden problems. Now we can talk about it, and we need to talk about it if we are to have peace.

Former KTUU journalist Megan Baldino, who now works for Shell Alaska, moderated the panel discussion and said that covering the clergy abuse scandal caused her to re-examine her devout Catholic faith and upbringing. She said that Catholic Diocese of Fairbanks officials had been invited to the panel, but declined to participate. In response, a Father Tom with the Anchorage Diocese, who was in the audience, stepped forward and went to his knees to ask for forgiveness on behalf of the Catholic Church.

Boudreau said that it was hard to speak the words "sexual abuse" and identify herself as a victim. "It held power over me for a long time, and I had to own it," she said. She said she grew up a devout Catholic and loved everything about the church. "I lost that part in me and had to find something greater. I found it in my Yupik spirituality," she said. Boudreau now works for the Alaska Native Justice Center to establish and operate an Alaska Native Unit within Alaska CARES, a Child Advocacy Center in Anchorage.

In the 1950s she moved to Nome and met her husband Simon Angusuc. The married on July 3, 1958 and raised her son, Dan, whose father had died in a car accident in West Virginia before Dan was born. The family was completed with the adoption of Dorothy, whom they loved and treated as their own.

The family moved to Fairbanks for a three-year period to allow Simon to attend machinist schooling so he could work for the Gold Company. After he completed training, the family moved back to Nome, where they made their home. The family was deeply saddened in 1989 when he died of a massive heart at-

Daisy and Simon adopted Kevin Nelson Angusuc, Dan's oldest child, whom they loved and cherished until his death in February of 1996. The day before she died, she let Dan and June know that she was very sick and ready to be with the Lord. She expressed that she loved all her grandchildren very much and all her relatives in Shishmaref.

Daisy is survived by her son Dan, wife June and girls Kayli, Jada and Rhianna; daughter Dorothy; grandsons Jason, Miah and Koonuk, greatgrandchildren Kiernan, Alfred, Angela, Kevin and Carter. Other relatives are the Weviouannas, Navoukpuks, Ningealooks, Eningowuks and many others.

Lily Marion Mayland was born March 9, 1942 in Koyuk to Archie and Alice Henry. She died on April 11, 2011 in Koyuk at the age of 69.

Lily attended school up until the eighth grade in Koyuk. After finishing school she stayed home to help raise her brothers and sisters. She later became a midwife and volunteer health aide. She also worked for the U.S. Postal Service as Raymond's postmaster assistant where she met Harold Pilcher, Sr. They were married soon after in 1968. Together they had three children, Harold Jr., Alice and Jennie.

After her first marriage ended and while living in Nome, Lily met Paul Mayland and they moved to Koyuk. Together they raised the children and both loved to be out in the country. Weather permitting, Auntie Lily, or Lil as many knew her, would be out berry picking, ice fishing or setting net. Whatever the seasonal activity, she was ready. The East fork on the Koyuk River was a home away from home for her and family. During fishing season, that is where one would find her.

Lily was full of life! She took great pride in anything she did. She worked for 25 years at the Bering Strait School District as a cook and

Food Poisoning: How to prevent food-borne illness

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

According to the Center for Disease Control and Prevention, roughly 1 in 6 people contract a food-borne illness every year.

Symptoms usually appear within a few hours, sometimes a few days, after eating contaminated foods like unwashed vegetables, poorly prepared clams, pasta salads sitting at room temperature for several hours, or meat that has been thawed and rechilled without cooking. The symptoms begin as abdominal cramping followed by nausea, diarrhea, and vomiting. In otherwise healthy people the diarrhea and vomiting end in 24 to 48 hours.

Food poisoning, a common name for food-borne illnesses, can be caused by bacteria like E. coli or Salmonella, viruses like Hepatitis A or the Norwalk virus, or parasites like Giardia.

In many cases, it is not the organism that causes the illness, but a toxin released by the organism. This is why certain forms of food poisoning can occur even after a contaminated food is cooked: the bacteria may be killed, but the toxin remains active in the food.

Typically, it is hard to know exactly which organism is causing vomiting and diarrhea after eating food suspected to be contaminated with a bacteria, virus, or parasite, especially early in the course of an illness.

Therefore, regardless of the cause, early treatment is always the same: patients are encouraged to stay hydrated with small sips of oral fluids. This may be difficult at first when everything seems to come right back up or pass straight through, but early hydration is what can make the difference between a mild illness that passes and a life-threatening event that requires hospitalization and I.V.

The best oral fluids are a bland mix of water, electrolytes (salts), and sugar. Fluids may be purchased commercially (Pedialyte), made from a dilute sports drink (dilute Gatorade), or mixed from home ingredients. Taking the fluid in sips every minute or so allows much of the fluid to be absorbed even if vomiting or diarrhea continues.

Antibiotics are rarely needed to treat food poisoning. If diarrhea lasts more than 3 days, doctors often order a study of the stool to determine which organism is causing the symptoms. Then if appropriate, antibiotics can be selected to target the offending germ.

It is important to remember that vomiting and diarrhea are natural means by which the body flushes out harmful germs and toxins. Using anti-diarrhea agents for diarrhea associated with food poisoning can be dangerous because the medication slows this process and can allow overgrowth of the harmful organism. Prevention of food poisoning is straightforward:

• Wash your hands, cooking utensils, and food preparation surfaces often.

• Keep raw foods separate from prepared foods especially during storage or when preparing game or fish for the freezer.

• Cook foods to at least a temperature of 145° F. This will kill most harmful organisms.

•Refrigerate perishable foods within two hours of preparation. Put food in the freezer that will not be eaten within 48 hours.

• Thaw frozen foods in the refrigerator, under running water, or in a microwave. Avoid thawing foods at room temperature.

• Throw out suspicious foods. Many bacteria and toxins are tasteless, odorless, and cannot be destroyed by cooking. Do not rely on taste or smell to determine if a food is safe. If there is question regarding a food's preparation or storage, throw it out.

If you or a family member contracts a food borne illness, the CDC recommends initiating oral hydration as soon as possible. Then call your doctor if the diarrheal illness is accompanied by:

• Fever over 101.5° F.

• Blood in the stools.

• Prolonged vomiting that prevents keeping liquid down.

• Signs of dehydration like dizziness, dry mouth, or decreased urination.

• Diarrhea lasting more than three days.

Born and raised in Nome, Ronnie graduated from Nome-Beltz High School in 1984. He married Frances Arnold of Kotzebue in August 1987. They had two beautiful daughters, Christine and Janelle, who live on the Big Island of Hawaii.

Ronnie worked for the Alaska Gold Company in Nome after graduating from high school until the mid 90s. Soon after, he moved to Anchorage to be with family and worked as an RV mechanic until his health failed.

In 2009 he accepted God as his lord and savior. God's grace was shown by Ronnie's bravery in the last few years, and God's mercy was given by Ronnie's peaceful passing.

Ronnie loved to hunt, fish and crab with family and friends in Nome and Anchorage. In Nome, he hunted birds, moose, seal and walrus. He bravely climbed cliffs for bird eggs. From setting nets for salmon near the family cabin at Cape Nome, fishing the rivers and ice fishing, Ronnie loved to fish. He took every opportunity to fish with Anchorage buddies on any lake, river or the sea, even with a failing body. He always looked forward to the start of fishing season by dipnetting for hooligan at Twenty Mile River, clamming at Ninilchik, dip netting for salmon in Chitnina, fishing at Ship Creek, Seward, and Russian

Redistricting board hears from Nome

By Sandra L. Medearis

About a dozen Nome folks turned out to participate in a session of testimony before members of the Alaska Redistricting Board Tuesday morning, April 26.

Board members Marie N. Greene of Kotzebue, CEO of NANA Regional Corp., and PeggyAnn McConnochie, a realtor from Juneau attended along with board attorney Michael White and ARB staffer Jim Ellis. The board has endorsed two options of its own and several options from private groups.

The board has the task to carve up House and Senate districts to achieve a population in each that can be only a few percent short of equal. Based on the state's 2010 Census that means the population of 710,231 needed to be divided by 40 House districts to find the magic target number for a district, which turned out to be 17,755. The state population grew by 83,299 over the last decade, meaning some districts with added factor of population shifts need to be redrawn. The board has a strict timeline for getting the redistricting job done with a deadline of June 13 to draft a plan for final adoption. How the ARB will balance competing interests and level out district population numbers will be newsworthy.

Consistent with the Alaska Constitution and the Voting Rights Act, districts have to be refigured every 10 years each decennial census to ensure fair and equal representation. Districts cannot be redrawn in a way that dilutes the power of minority votes, an issue germane to redrawing rural Alaska districts. Currently the state has nine Voting Rights Districts—six House districts and three Senate districts. The board has to avoid losing these nine VRAs—and keep people happy on shared language, regional corporation interests and energy plans.

Plastic-coated maps lined the walls of Council Chambers where citizens took a seat one-by-one at the table to address the board concerning two proposed board options and several options submitted by private coalitions that would affect Districts 39 and 40. Mostly, what they agreed they didn't like was a plan submitted by Alaskans For Fair Districting and other private groups that would have District 39 stretch in a narrower strip from St. Lawrence Island all the way east to Canada, taking in Arctic Village in the northeast and extend south to include

Tok. Another private group, the Rights Coalition, submitted a plan, not endorsed by the ARB, that would put half the Seward Peninsula in District 39 which would then snake southward to the Kuskokwim Peninsula, then go east toward the Canadian border and drop abruptly south, ending short of Cordova and Valdez. A plan from the Bush Caucus was very roughly similar in several variations to the proposed option from AFFD in having District 39 extend east from St. Lawrence Island to Canada and drop southward along the border way below Tok. The Bush Caucus plan maximized Voting Rights Act districts for representation of Alaska Natives in rural Alaska.

Nonetheless, people testified they did not think pulling the eastern boundary over to Canada was a good idea.

Think of what would happen to these far-flung map configurations in 10 years after the 2020 Census when rural population would further decline, said several people—reconfiguring would be "ugly" for future generations. If the population goes up, districts 39 and 40 may need a thousand or two more people, depending on population shifts.

"This clear over to the Canadian border stuff makes it almost impossible for a representative to keep in touch with the constituency," Jana Varrati said. "Unless they had a personal plane they wouldn't make enough money through fundraising. That makes a person subject to big money from industrial corporations and yields undue influence on an individual."

So said Mitch Erickson: "East-west doesn't make a lot of sense."

The central area of a drawn-out district would be different than western parts. "You have to consider commerce, lifestyle, ANWR, the whole nine yards. I'd rather see north-south orientation than east-west," Erickson said.

Laura Lawrence: The plan to take Marshall, Russian River and Shishmaref into District 39 and pairing districts 39 and 40 to keep Senate District T makes the most sense to her.

Louie Green Sr. went for ARB Options 1 and 2—with compact maps that include raising the boundary of District 39 to include Shishmaref (pop. 563) on the north and easing the boundary southward to take Russian Mission (pop.414) and Marshall (pop. 312) from District 38.

"They are the only two plans I've seen that satisfy people I've talked to," he said.

The two plans are identical except for slight variations in state senate district pairings.

Gary Longley felt the same. "Options I and 2 look good," he said. "That keeps our district intact. I don't like it where the district is spread across to the Canadian border. That AFFR plan is ridiculous."

Marcia Davis, general counsel for Calista Corp., said she wants to see a plan where the corporation would not be spread over four districts. Calista would like to bring its lower river villages of the Yukon-Kuskokwim Delta along with its upper river villages along the Yukon and Kuskokwim rivers to keep dominant language and subsistence practices together for a strong Yupik voice. She would be all right with transferring Marshall and Russian River out of District 38.

"They will be well taken care of in District 39," she said.

Jimmy Adams agreed with keeping regional corporations together.

It's all about people, Dan Karmun reminded. "You need to consider language when drawing voting districts," Karmun said. "There is no need to divide people any more than we have. People love to be together, work together, live together."

A statewide teleconferenced hearing on May 6 will end the public comment process. Those interested in testifying can attend at the Legislative Information Office via the east entrance of the State Building on Front Street from 9 a.m. to noon and from 2 p.m. to 6 p.m.

Artist in residence at White Mountain

The Artist in Schools project brought Anchorage artist Shala Dobson to White Mountain. Dobson was the Artist in Residence for the last two weeks of April and worked with students and community members to create art projects. Printmaking, drawing, painting and ceramics were on the agenda. Evening classes were open to the public, and an exhibit of all art works was held April 29.

The residency was made possible through funds from the Alaska State Council on the Arts, the Alaska State Legislature, the National Endowment for the Arts, the Rasmuson Foundation and the Bering Strait School District.

ARTIST MELODY — Melody Bergamaschi puts the finishing touches on her clay face in ceramics. Teacher Clint Schultz and all 10 second and third grade students enjoyed the various forms of art taught by artist in resident Shala Dobson for the past two weeks. Besides working with clay, Dobson taught each class the basics of drawing, painting and printmaking.

Dredges, Rock Creek Mine facing uncertain future

By Diana Haecker

Although the bucket lines stopped churning long ago and Nome's dredges have been sitting idle in their dredge ponds as symbols of the town's mining heritage, they are now subject of discussions as to what their future should hold. Dredges

2,3,5 and 6 changed owners recently when NovaGold Resources Inc. decided that its Nome holdings - including the Rock Creek mine and Big Hurrah – are not core assets anymore and the whole lot is for sale. NovaGold, parent company of Alaska Gold Co., sold more than 11,000 acres of land and patented mining claims in and around Nome to a newly created company named Nome Gold Alaska Corporation, based in Canada.

One of NGA's principal investors is Robert Salna. Salna said in an interview with The Nome Nugget that the company hasn't decided yet what the course of action is going to be regarding the dredges. He said that according to preliminary numbers, the mammoths of steel and wood would be too expensive to resuscitate and to be brought back to life as operating dredges. # City Council reviews School board budget

By Lori Head

There was only one item on Nome City Council's agenda of May 9-Nome Public School's FY 2012 budget. Because it was a work session no action was taken, only discussion. All six council members were present as Nome Public Schools Superintendent Jon Wehde presented the budget and council members asked questions. NPS Business Manager Cathi Wojtanek sat beside Wehde and fielded questions he had regarding amounts and percentages. Two school board members, Barb Amarok and Marie Tozier, were also present.

CIP & Fund Balance

Wehde explained, "We're going to use some CIP funding and some fund balance funding to balance this year's budget. Not atypical for schools in our weight class: single site, about our enrollment. But it's a first for Nome." He was referring to the $273,789 withdrawal from the school's fund balance, as well as the $200,000 Boiler CIP (Capital Improvement Project) and $130,473 Alarm and Transfer CIP amounts under the revenue section of the budget summary.

Three percent increase on exempt and administrative contracts

Councilman Stan Andersen asked what the percentage increase was on exempt and administrative contracts. Wojtanek answered, "It was a three percent increase." Wehde added that 'in terms of administrative contracts for next year, I ditched two posi-

NJUS water department has reduced the amount of fluoride in the city's drinking water, according to an advisory from two federal agencies. The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services with the Environmental Protection Agency have issued a joint statement saving they were wrong in recommending 1.2 mg/liter in northern areas and only 0.7 mg./liter in warmer, southern areas. Recent data do not show a convincing relationship between fluid intake and ambient air temperature. Hence, fluoridation in Nome has gone down to 0.7 mg/liter. This is the lowest range in the current DHSS recommendation for fluoride, which the DHSS says is a cost-effective method for delivering fluoride for the prevention of tooth decay. Other health experts say the need for fluoride in drinking water is hog-

The current short bridge leading from Seppala Drive to Port Road going past Nome Joint Utility Sys tem will be replaced by a relocated new bridge. NJUS hoped the old bridge would be retained as a walking bridge, or, suggested the public, a place away from the highway to cast fishing lines into the Snake River. tions." The two positions eliminated were the Operations Manager and the Curriculum and Assessment Coordinator which Wehde estimated as "well north of $200,000 savings in administration" to the budget.

39.9% increase in health insurance

Final rates came in from Aetna at a 39.9% increase for health insurance. The budget submitted to the City Council was based on a 40% increase. This rate doesn't take effect until July 1, 2011 and Wehde announced that they have a broker meeting with a committee including Amarok to "shop up a better rate."

Andersen also queried about the $668,209 Supplies, Materials & Media expense. Wehde explained "it's the division of doing business in all the schools for all the supplies that we purchase. Whether it be art or band music and you'll find that it's allocated across all of the pages in supply lines." Andersen replied, "Toilet paper and everything." "Exactly," concluded Wehde.

Brown asked about the $37,680 expense for social studies textbooks. He asked, "How often are textbooks typically replaced?" Wehde explained the school district runs on an eight year cycle with some textbook replacements being more costly than

Brown also asked about the Pre-K Pilot Project. Wehde acknowledged that former elementary school principal Carl White's application "got us on board" for that program and that pending the governor's action he felt encouraged that it would be funded again in FY12. Brown then asked the school board members in the audience what their perspective was on this program "even after this funding disappears." Amarok stated, "Personally, I absolutely support anything we can do to help students before they hit kindergarten." She later said, if necessary, it would be absolutely be on the table for discussion with the board and Tozier nodded in agreement.

Dual Leadership Position

"Quite a load," was how Councilwoman Josie Stiles described David

Keller's dual position as principal of Nome Elementary School and Special Education Director. She asked if that was going to continue. Wehde responded with a 48 month history of "shrinking administration" with the director of maintenance and director of special education positions being cut previously. Then began a hiring of a special education coordinator, to an "offshore" special education director who came to Nome once a month, to again cutting the position. Currently, Wehde explained that Sandy Harvey serves as Special Education Coordinator with 20 years of experience and David Keller as the director of special education, and "90 percent of the day" as principal of NES.

FY13 warning

"I will tell you this budget takes us through one more year of Keller/Harvey. And I know, based on the needs and the budget in FY13, there's going to be quite a shake up. OK. I'm sorry I won't be here for the party. It's been a good eight

Dear Editor:

Sometime we have to leave our loved ones to bring ourselves into higher consciousness. Constantly being pulled down to the level of the criminal mind (laziness), it gets old when on a journey of self-discovery. Going back to the mentality of a toddler, (always wanting to learn new things) gives you reason enough to get up each day and often with zest for the new discoveries and/or creations you will make that day.

I want to thank my parents for giving me a sense of security and freedom. I thank my mother who explained to me how she had to let me go, freed me from the protective mother she is. That is love, my friends in newspaper land. Keep love alive by sharing it with those you care about the most; it will start you on a journey. So long as you stay on the path, wealth in forms you never knew before will start to appear as if by magic.

But I also kept 113 people at their post and we need every one of them to take care of our 660 kids. There's going to be some changes next year. All of our soft money people are not being paid with funds you can arbitrarily go to,' cautioned Wehde.

District turnover

Stiles also asked the school board to consider the turnover the school district has had with superintendents and principals in the past four years and suggested they "focus on retention." Wehde assured the Council that strong and stable leadership is in place for future school years.

Alaska Redistricting Board executive director dies

Ron Miller, the executive director of the Alaska Redistricting Board, died unexpectedly of a heart attack on Sunday. Miller was 65 years old and is survived by his wife Oksana and children Kolya and Katya. Until a new director is hired, the board's assistant director Taylor Bickford will assume the responsibility of day-to-day operational management. The board is currently drawing up a final redistricting plan and hopes to get it done by the June 14 deadline. Miller worked as the executive director of the Alaska Industrial Development and Export Authority and the Alaska Energy Authority from 2003 to 2008. He was an international trade specialist for the Cowper Administration as and also worked as legal counsel to the North Pacific Fishery Management Council.

Legislature moves operating budget, still stalled over capital budget

Things are moving as of day 22 of the special session of the legislature. The joint Senate-House conference committee passed the FY12 operating budget, and the FY12 mental health budget. The operating budget totals $9.02 billion with $5.7 billion coming from general funds. The budget includes $40 million in additional funding for schools and communities as a result of the jump in state revenue and surpluses due to rising oil prices. Alaska's schools will receive a one-time $20-million payment towards the base student allocation. Communities are about to get a one-time $20 million allocation for community revenue sharing.

The budget also includes $6.7 million for Alaska's Coastal Management program. The operating budget also changed funding for merit-based scholarships, which will now be approximately $6 million with another $3 million for needs-based scholarships. The budget includes $1.7 for prekindergarten programs. Also, $1 billion of savings was added to the state's statutory budget reserve fund, $400 million was set aside for the Power Cost Equalization Endowment Fund, and $60 million for a ferry replacement fund. Both budgets now head to Governor Sean Parnell for his signature.

With the first special session this year two-thirds over, there still is no compromise on the capital budget in sight. The House Special Committee on Energy and the Resources held a 14member joint hearing on Saturday on many of the capital budget energy projects boxed up in the Senate Finance Committee's contingency language. That language attempts to 'veto-proof' the projects as a single package, and has been the primary sticking point in negotiations with the Senate throughout the special session. The governor narrowed the to-do list down to ten bills. Five passed quickly, but three of the five outstanding bills - the capital budget, the Alaska Performance Scholarship legislation and renewal of the Alaska Coastal Management Program - have not left the Senate finance committee.

BP Alaska to pay $25 million penalty for North Slope oil spill

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, the U.S. Department of Justice and the U.S. Department of Transportation's Pipeline and Hazardous Materials Safety Administration last week announced that BP Exploration Alaska, Inc. settled to pay $25 million in civil penalties. BP is also to implement a system-wide pipeline integrity management program. The penalty was levied for spilling more than 5,000 barrels of crude oil from the company's pipelines on the North Slope. The penalty is the largest per-barrel penalty to date for an oil spill.

Cynthia Giles, assistant administrator for EPA said that the spill occurred because of gross negligence and that this case sends a message that the EPA intends to insist that BP Alaska and other companies act responsibly to prevent pipeline oil spills. În March 2006, BP Alaska spilled approximately 5,054 barrels of crude oil and a second spill occurred in August 2006 with approximately 24 barrels of crude oil spilled.

Investigators from EPA and PHMSA determined that the spills were a result of BP Alaska's failure to properly inspect and maintain the pipeline to prevent corrosion. PHMSA issued a Corrective Action Order to BP Alaska that addressed the pipeline's risks and ordered pipeline repair or replacement. When BP Alaska did not fully comply with the terms of the corrective action, PHMSA referred the case to the De-

This settlement also addresses Clean Air Act violations arising out of BP Alaska's improper asbestos removal along the pipeline in the aftermath of the spill. In 2007, BP Alaska pleaded guilty to one misdemeanor violation of the Clean Water Act for the March 2006 spill and was sentenced to three years probation, ordered to pay a $20 million criminal penalty, including a $12 million fine, $4 million to the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation to support research and activities on the North Slope and $4 million in restitution to the State of Alaska.

Parnell still challenges federal health care mandates

State of Alaska filed a court brief last week opposing the federal government's mandate that every American is required to purchase health insurance or face a penalty. The brief by the State of Alaska, 25 other states and the National Federation of Independent Businesses, was filed with the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 11th Circuit. The brief supports Federal District Court Judge Roger Vinson's ruling on the national health care reform law of 2009, which stated the individual mandate is unconstitutional for violating the commerce clause.

Kuskokwim floods Crooked Creek

The state's River Watch team said that high water has inundated homes in Crooked Creek. The Kuskokwim River flooded the village and 20 people had to be evacuated. Elderly people were airlifted out of the village with helicopters from Donlin Creek LLC. As of Monday, a dozen people are left in the flood area at Crooked Creek. Helicopters are standing by to fly them out if need be.

This year's breakup is unique as there was a thaw during Thanksgiving and when the river refroze, it did so in huge chunks of jumble ice.

Federal subsistence board recommends bycatch hard caps

The federal subsistence board met last week and proposed to add two seats for subsistence users from rural Alaska to the board. The board also addressed the issue of salmon bycatch and recommended that the North Pacific Fishery Management council set a hard cap of 15,000 king salmon as bycatch in the Gulf of Alaska Pollock fishery and a 50,000 chum salmon cap caught in the Bering Sea Pollock fishery.

Planning panel considers Camp 5 Subdivision

By Sandra L. Medearis

Alaska Gold has applied to the Nome Planning Commission for preliminary approval of a major subdivision plat laid out on both sides of the Bob Blodgett Highway in the vicinity of the historic Camp 5 bunkhouse and mess hall. The area is near the curve of the road as it goes past the softball fields.

The subdivision would be located mostly on thawed ground, dredge tailings, covering several of Alaska Gold Co.'s U.S. Mineral Survey patented claims with historic and colorful names, including Yellow Jacket Placer, Bessie Bench Placer and Mabel Bench Placer. It is not anticipated that anyone will build homes on the subdivision. No sewer and water hookups will be needed.

Alaska Gold, a subsidiary of NovaGold, simply wants the land, 27.38 acres, divided into tracts to ease title transfer on the land south of the highway to Nome Gold Alaska Corp. of Fairbanks, according to AGC land manager Nikolai Ivanoff.

While the planning panel did not approve the plat at its May 3 meeting, it promised to meet soon to take up the issue provided Alaska Gold completes some work orders: pervandalized, so we need to take a good look at possible renovation costs," Salna said. "The highest probability is that they will be donated to the town eventually.'

Salna added that there is gold underneath them and that Nome Gold Alaska would remove the gold, which would entail moving the dredges from their current locations, recovering the gold and then bringing them back to their old spot.

Salna also said that there are no plans to dismantle them and sell them as scrap metal. "The dredges will stay in Nome," Salna assured.

The issue has not been brought before the city council yet.

Before NovaGold sold the placer mining claims to Nome Gold Alaska, the Pioneers of Alaska raised the concern that Nome's dredges may be disposed of. The Nome Igloo #1 and the Grand Igloo Pioneers of Alaska passed a resolution last fall that urged the preservation of relics and specifically gold dredges and mining equipment. The resolution passed during the 94th grand igloo convention in Ketchikan "urges the State of Alaska, our local government entities and other civic organizations and the business community to join in a concerted effort to preserve and protect the relics of our history."

It also "implores the current owners of all gold dredges and other historic implements of our mining history to take necessary steps to insure they remain, whether by direct preservation by the current owner or if they are unable, to seek alternative measures such as transfer of the historic memorabilia to a community development or preservation organization, and to take any and all other steps to prevent their destruction or removal.

Rock Creek closure discussed with state regulators

The other idle asset of NovaGold in Nome is the Rock Creek gold mine, which has been in care and maintenance status since November 2008, after the mine had start up difficulties that were not resolved.

As the mine sits unproductive year after year, the company is working on getting a better handle on the water accumulation problem behind the tailings facility dam. NovaGold applied for a permit to discharge water – after it has been treated – to the surface and into Rock Creek. Allen Nakanishi with the Department of Environmental Conservation explained the permit would be valid for five years while the mine is in temporary closure and that it would only allow the discharge of treated water from the water treatment plant would be 500 gallons per minute. In addition, water from the treatment plant is injected back into the earth via the injection gallery, but a surface discharge would allow the company to reduce the water level at the Tailings Facility Dam at a faster meeting water quality standards into

Rock Creek. The maximum flow rate

The state's dam safety engineer Charlie Cobb said that the current water level behind the dam is sufficiently low to not pose a concern for the integrity of the dam. He said the dam is 53 feet high at its highest point and that the water level is less than 30 feet high at the toe of the Department of Natural Resources large mine coordinator Jack Di-Marchi said that regulators are currently working with NovaGold to develop a closure plan. They were given a draft closure plan that is the subject of meetings between the company's engineers and state regulators later this week.

One aspect of closure entails the removal of the tailings behind the dam to dispose of them in the mining pit. Since the cyanide circuit was never operational, the tailings are considered "benign" and can be put back into the mining pit and capped

Cobb explained that at closure, the 3,000 foot long dam would be breached at its lowest lying point with a V-shaped cut. This would prevent the accumulation of water in the Specifics of the plan have not been made public as state regulators and the mining company are in the beginning stages to work out details to close the mine.

NovaGold has not announced whether or not it intends to close the mine. A request for an interview with the company's spokesperson was not answered in time for this article.

There is still no word on what the electrical power surcharge per kilowatt will be on power bills for the coming year. Handeland said the oil purchase price had not been signed, but the price per gallon would depend on an average computed based on an average over 30 days of Platts index prices. The Western Alaska Fuel Group, a bulk-purchasing group of which NJUS is a member, has taken bids on fuel transport and selected Vitus Marine as the 2011 fuel supplier. Vitus Marine was the low bidder, and in using Vitus Marine, WAFG will be supporting the neighboring coop, Alaska Village Electric

Mark Smith and Shaen Tarter, who worked together for many years at Yukon Fuel, formed Vitus Marine in 2009. The barge company will work the Western Alaska waters and is owned by a subsidiary of AVEC that manages 33 village utilities. Vitus Marine is an investment of $12 million by AVEC to insert competition into a market dominated by Crowley Maritime, for a projected savings of $2.5 million over a fiveyear contract. Vitus Marine has two tug boats, each 75 feet long, and two barges, one 200 feet long and one 76 feet long. The larger barge has 10 separate tanks for carrying different kinds of fuel products.

NJUS will have to prepay the fuel refiners, and has secured a loan through Wells Fargo bank to meet costs when determined.

The NJUS board has approved a spending plan for fiscal year 2011 to the tune of around $13 million. The budget next goes to the City of Nome for final approval.

Port Commission wants sunken barge, Lulu, removed from outer harbor Design options for third causeway dock and ramp discussed

By Laurie McNicholas

The sunken barge visible in the port's outer harbor between the causeway and the breakwater is a safety hazard and should be removed, all five members of the Nome Port Commission agreed at a work session on May 4. Harbormaster Joy Baker said the barge is named Lulu.

Charlie Lean said he noticed more than one response to the city's community survey calling for removal of the barge. He also quoted a response from a parent whose son loves to jump off the barge. Lean described metal on the barge as "sharp and nasty." He said a kid could put his foot through it and get a serious injury. Cam Kristenson said a kid who jumps off the barge could hit his head, or a boat could come at it in a storm

"It takes up space and serves no purpose," noted Jeff Darling. Jim Adams said the barge creates eddies and causes siltation.

"I was chomping at the bit to tear it down last year," said Jim West, Jr., Port Commission chairman. "I talked him out of it," said Harbormaster Joy Baker, noting that the work is not authorized or funded.

The commissioners endorsed removing Lulu during a discussion of changes needed to improve efficient use of the harbor with Eileen Bechtol of Bechtol Planning and Development. She is helping the city update the Nome comprehensive plan and draft a plan for port and harbor development. Bechtol gave the commissioners copies of responses to community survey questions about opportunities for Nome in the port, shipping and fisheries; development of the middle beach area; and suggestions for development projects at the port and harbor. The survey results are posted on the City of Nome web site, as is an aerial photo of the port and harbor that identifies sites in the area.

Lean suggested increasing dock space on the west side of the inner harbor by Whitney's building shop and dredging the area to accommodate small boats.

Bechtol asked if changes are needed for developing uplands around the port. West suggested developing the north side of the port industrial pad for parking and storage. Darling asked whether land should be purchased from Alaska Gold for port expansion. Bechtol asked where the land is. "It's a variety of areas around the port pad, and we are to decide if we want some or all of it," said Baker. She said the city administration is discussing the purchase with an Alaska Gold representative and the city council.

Bechtol asked the commissioners for ideas to make the port a hub for fisheries research and other arctic research, and a staging area for oil exploration and drilling in arctic waters. "NSEDC has a small lab and we talk to research groups and say here we are," replied Lean, the director of fisheries research and development for Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. He said research groups need assistance with logistics such as transshipping specimens, crew switching and receiving and holding nets. NSEDC and the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game provide assistance to agencies they work with, he added.

Lean said local people could be employed as boat operators and science technicians if research groups can be persuaded to view Norton Sound as a research stop. Bechtol asked if local boat owners should be encouraged to get six-pack licenses to provide services to research vessels. Lean said a Coast Guard icebreaker is used for research funded by the National Science Foundation.

"When it comes offshore, they need a lighter to go out there — a harbor taxi to put people on and take stuff off," Lean said. "We have 50-foot vessels in town. If more of those guys had six-pack licenses, they could do that between fishing." He said two research vessels will conduct trawl surveys in Norton Sound this summer: The state will use the Pendalus, and the National Marine Fisheries Service will use a larger vessel for work on the north shore of Norton Sound and out in the Bering Strait.

Kristenson, who works for Crowley Marine Services, said he has been dealing with Shell Oil Co. Last week Shell submitted a plan to the Bureau of Ocean Energy, Management, Regulation and Enforcement to drill up to four exploratory wells in the Beaufort Sea in the summers of 2012 and 2013. Kristenson said a lot of tasks are piling up in relation to Shell's plans

Baker noted that Shell won't drill in the Beaufort Sea this summer. Shell abandoned plans for exploratory drilling in the Beaufort in 2011 after the Environmental Appeals Board remanded air permits for the work back to the Environmental Protection Agency. Kristenson said Shell didn't work in the Beaufort last summer, but three of the company's vessels still came through Nome. "If they drill and find something...this is to be their base," Kristenson said. "They are talking leasing all the land around the warehouses from Crowlev."

Baker said new fenders are needed in the dock around the Crowley space. "So we need to include that," Bechtol noted. She asked whether the port and harbor development continued from page 4 form perk tests on the soil (to show rate of water absorption), show an easement for access to an existing utility pole on the plat and come to a solution for an exterior boundary that may run through two of the Camp Five buildings south of the highway—perhaps an easement for the life of the buildings.

Wait a minute, Judy Martinson said from the audience at City Hall. "Putting in an easement for the life of the buildings asks for plowing down historic buildings," Martinson said. Commissioners said Alaska Gold owned the issue, that it wasn't their job to solve the boundary line, but just to approve or disapprove the preliminary plat.

George Krier, surveyor, spoke to the subdivision issue via telephone from Florida. AKG was ready to meet planners' requirements, he said.

"We want to complete the subdivision so the title transfer can take place. Whatever hoops we have to jump through, that's what we'll do."

Following preliminary plat approval, final approval is anticipated in August. In mid-March, NovaGold Resources, Inc. announced a pact to sell Nome Gold Alaska Corp. 11,500 acres held by subsidiary AGC for $21 million. NovaGold, which also owns real estate lots and sand and gravel sites, is looking for additional buyers for its holdings, including Rock Creek Mine and Big Hurrah

In other business, the planning group decided to forward to the Nome Common Council for its approval the inclusion of additional land under a general permit from the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to locally manage wetlands. The City's existing general permit expires in July. Under the last renewal in 2006, the City added 54 acres. This time, the planners think it is a good idea to add pieces that include the area around the small boat harbor to West "E" Street and Snake River-Belmont Point, a piece of land by East End Park, the Port of Nome industrial pad, the "State Trailers" area south of the Snake River and Darling Subdivision near the Lester Bench Road across from the Anvil Mountain Correctional Center, also known as 'Springerville."

From the audience, resident Chick Trainor wanted more information, saying he thought the federal government was encroaching too much on what states could do, and was the federal government expanding into further area.

Almost the opposite, planning head Tom Sparks explained. The move was basically cutting the Corps out of the permitting process on those lands. Including these areas under the City's general permit meant a person wanting to fill a lot would go to the City rather than going as an individual to the Corps of Engineers for a permit. The fill permit, if granted, would be included in the building permit, Sparks explained.

"I think it is a good thing to add as much as we can to help us locally," he said. "Once we find out how much money it is going to cost, the City is going to cut it [the proposed additions] back a bit."

ACSA 8th graders travel to Washington, D.C.

Public Transit Etiquette 101: "You need to have your exact fare ready before you board the bus, and boys, if you have a seat on the bus or metro, it's polite to offer it to a lady who is standing," instructed Todd Hindman, principal/teacher of Anvil City Science Academy.

And so the seven-day journey began. This would be the fifth trip Hindman has organized, and then led, of ACSA eighth graders to Washington, D.C.

On day one, fresh off the subway, what national monument did the group visit first? The merry-goround. Hindman explained, "Every year the group wants to do this." With that accomplished, the remainder of the visit would be packed with historic monuments, museums, artifacts, documents, buildings and graves.

One record-breaking long day began with an official meeting time of 6 a.m. in the lobby, unofficially at 4 a.m. due to East Coast birds chirping, to be at a tour of the White House by 7:30 a.m. The day concluded around 10:30 p.m. as bus Line 1 dropped off the weary ACSA students across the street from the 4 H Conference Center where they staved.

A pedometer would have told an interesting story as this group walked, and walked. They walked to the National Museum of the American Indian, to the National Museum of Natural History and to the National Air and Space Museum. One evening, after a full day of walking, they walked for an additional three hours at the National Mall with the "Memorials by Moonlight" guided tour of the Jefferson, Lincoln, Roosevelt and Washington memorials among others. Casualties were only physical in nature with numerous blisters and at least two broken pairs of shoes. Spirits remained high and pleasant.

At the National Archives and Records Administration, the eighth graders saw the actual Declaration of Independence, Constitution and Bill of Rights in a dimly lighted room. Outside, on brightly lighted steps of the Supreme Court, they heard someone exercising one of the Bill of Right's freedoms, freedom of speech, as the demonstrator shared his written views on a sign and as he addressed a captive audience waiting in a line to hear the Supreme Court.

All senses were expanded as these ACSA students viewed the ruby red slippers Dorothy wore in the movie, "The Wizard of Oz," or listened to the clicking sound of sparkling black, military shoes during the changing of the guards at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier. The group also heard the double bell warning with a recorded voice at the metro warning, "doors closing" as it left behind Hindman and a few students, thereby earning him the nickname of "Mr. Left Behindman."

As the students walked through a hallway of hundreds of pairs of shoes taken off of Holocaust victims, the smell of death, sorrow and cruelty was overwhelming in the darkened leather at the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum. And finally, the sense of taste was enjoyed as the group of 16 – nine students, one teacher and six parent chaperones – were graciously invited into the home of Robby and Connie Brewer for a delicious dinner. Robby is the brother of Megan Brewer, a former teacher of Nome who recently passed away. He was so touched by Nome's warmth and hospitality that he invited the group for dinner and also provided tickets to a baseball game where the Washington Nationals fell to the New York Mets by two runs.

The group also toured the Capitol Building, guided by two of Senator Lisa Murkowski's aides, which included a visit to the Senate gallery. While the Senate was not in session, there were instead Senate Pages, sitting on the Senate floor doing their homework in their blue blazers. It was explained to the group that it's a one-semester program for 16-year-old students from all states, including Alaska

Other than a generous donation from Alaska Cabaret, Hotel, Restaurant and Retailer's Association and four years of fundraising, this ultimate field trip was funded by the students and their families.

Savoonga Students "Snow-It-All" in Spring Musical

By Christina Hoar

A handful of Savoonga students, led by teachers Jessie Petersen and Sarah Novak, performed a spring musical titled "Snow Biz" on April 30 for the community. The short performance, with a special guest appearance by fifth grade teacher Miss Nancy Bell, featured 10 Savoonga students, ranging from second to seventh graders, griping about the cold, learning how snow is made, and enjoying one of winter's most fun pastimes: snowboarding.

Students spent about three months learning lines, music, and choreography, but it was the sense of fun and camaraderie that students enjoyed the most. After-school rehearsals were a lot of work, but it all paid off when the students walked onto the stage in the Savoonga gym for their one-time performance. Parents, family members, and teachers filled the gym bleachers in anticipation of the musical and, although the young Thespians were nervous, the moment all eyes were on them, all anxiety seemed to melt away.

'Snow Biz" was the first school musical performed in Savoonga, and everyone in attendance thought it was a success. After the performance, audience members were overheard saying how great it was to see a musical performed and how proud they were of the students.

After the performance, Jessie stated, "The whole experience was a great opportunity to bring the arts into education for the students of Savoonga, something that I truly valued in my own educational experiences." Sarah continued, "It's important to give students the opportunity to develop their talents and an outlet to showcase them." With the success of "Snow Biz," many teachers hope this will be the first of many musicals and drama performances for Savoonga.

"A Thousand Cranes" on Tour

On May 2 and May 3 the Nome-Beltz High School Drama Club took their show "A Thousand Cranes" on tour. The play, dealing with a girl who was affected by the atom bomb that fell on Hiroshima, had themes for all ages to enjoy. After performing the play for the Nome Elementary School students on April 29, the drama club gave two performances for the community of Nome on April 30 and May 1. On Sunday afternoon, they packed up the show. Everything they needed for the play fit into a medium sized Rubbermaid tote, and they were off for a two-day tour. With the help of the Nome Arts Council and DAWN (Drugs Aren't Wanted In Nome), the group was able to secure enough funding to pay for airfare to both White Mountain and Golovin. While in the villages, the group worked with students on improvisational theatre skills and activities that worked on expression, body movement and voice, which are important attributes for any actor. After eating lunch with the students, the group set up their "stage" in the gym of both schools. With a traveling show, it is important that the set is minimal, the message is simple, and the delivery is spot on. The drama club delivered performances that were well received by each community.

Being in its fourth year, the drama club has done a wide variety of shows, but this was its first children's theatre tour. The students were happy to share their show with other parts of the region. The group would like to thank the villages of White Mountain and Golovin for allowing them to come and share their touring show with them and welcoming them into their communities. Hopefully, in years to come, this can be an activity that continues to increase live theatre performances around the region.

By Lori Head

The Thirty-fifth Annual Commencement Ceremony took place at Old St. Joseph Hall on Thursday, May 5, presided by Lee Haugen, director, University of Alaska Fairbanks Northwest Campus.

Distinguished guests were acknowledged, and Jackie Reader opened the program with a beautifully sung national anthem. Gratitude was expressed for husbands who answered doors and phone calls and fixed meals so that students could study. Teachers were praised. Appreciation for financial support was mentioned and inspiring stories of sacrifices made to pursue the worthy goal of education were shared.

"Yeah, you go Vanessa! That's our girl!" was enthusiastically shouted from the audience as Vanessa Johnson was bestowed a General Education Diploma. Edna Ruud of Nome gave an emotional address as she concluded, "I believe at 40 years old, I am living proof that you are never too old to get your GED." The standing-room-only crowd erupted with applause. A total of 32 diplomas through Kawerak's GED program were presented, including three to sisters Berta, Jolene and Kristy Kuzuguk of Shishmaref.

Two certificates were awarded by Bernice Joseph, UAF's vice-chancellor for Rural, Community, and Native Education — one to Mary Lou McPherson in Accounting Technician and another in Community Wellness Advocate (UAS) to Winona Huffman. Read by the presenter, Huffman wrote, "I am a grandmother with nine grandchildren and a college student along with some of my grandchildren. My advice is that education is a life-long experience."

Chancellor of UAF Brian Rogers en introduced both recipients of an Associate's Degree - Darla Tocktoo and Annie Woods.

Tocktoo's eventual goal is to earn a bachelor's degree and be a teacher in her own classroom. Rogers read,

"Darla says, 'Go for it! Anyone can do anything, no matter how long it takes." Darla was also recognized as the Northwest Campus Student of the Year for her outstanding scholastic achievement.

Woods shared with the audience that her "big inspiration" was her mother who was a "go-getter and whatever she wanted to learn, if she didn't know how, she learned that."

Patricia Jacobson, Regent, University of Alaska, then took the stage to present two bachelor's degrees, both in the field of social work.

Lucy Apatiki, first awarded, wrote, "You are never too old to go to school. If I can do it, anyone can. Keep an open mind and be willing to learn. Going to college is actually fun and the rewards are great."

Emma Olanna, the second recipient, reminisced that she was standing on the same ground of the former Nome Elementary School, which she attended many years ago. Olanna encouraged the audience of GED graduates to "keep going," noting that she received her GED back in 1979 and now, at 61, was receiving her bachelor's degree.

The final degree, a Master of Arts in Rural Development was presented to Pearl Mikulski by UAF's Dixie Dayo, Dept. of Alaska Native Studies and Rural Development. Mikulski explained that she had been paying for her college each year in Nome since 1990 and now vowed to send someone else to school. Mikulski stated, "We can all make a difference." When Pearl would say, "Somebody should pick that up," her grandmother's response would be, Why isn't that somebody you?"

Tassels were changed from the right to the left sides, and the celebration began. There were bouquets of flowers given to graduates by a long line of well-wishers, decorated sheet cakes in flavors ranging from blueberry, carrot and chocolate, and pictures being taken by proud family

Junior Park Rangers in Shaktoolik

By Lynda Bekoalok

Shaktoolik students show case their projects.

The Bering Land Bridge National Preserve is so close to our neck of the woods, yet few people know anything about it. The Upper Elementary Class in Shaktoolik not only learned about the Bering Land Bridge, but became Junior Park Rangers in the process.

The National Park Foundation has created a program that helps connect children to American's heritage. The National Park Service has over 180 different Junior Ranger programs for students. The programs include a Junior Ranger booklet and a map that guides the students through a particular national park by using science, history, art, and culture. When the students have completed the booklet they receive a NPS patch.

The Shaktoolik students enjoyed the booklet in which they learned the history of the Bering Land Bridge National Preserve. They also learned about the wildlife and climate changes. One of their favorite projects was making plant rubbings of leaves from trees on the Shaktoolik River.

To accompany the booklet the students also became WebRangers. To become a Webranger the students went to nps.gov and followed the link on the Kids section. The students designed their Webranger office and then did a series of Web activities about the Bering Land Bridge. The activities ranged from local culture to global warming.

To culminate the Junior Ranger project the students learned a few survival skills. One of which was to make a homemade sleeping bag. The students took large trash bags and stuffed dried grass in the bag. They learned that grass and leaves are good insulators and can keep them warm if they are ever stranded without a blanket.

The students really enjoyed the entire program. We hope that Nicole Andler, who happens to be a Park Ranger in Nome and one of the authors of the Bering Land Bridge National Preserve Junior Ranger booklet, will be able to come to Shaktoolik to swear the students in as Park Rangers and award their badge some time this year. If your students would like to become Junior Rangers we encourage you to contact Nicole Andler at: nichole_andler@nps.gov.

Building in St. Michael

By Mark Thompson, St. Michael

Using very little more than left-overs from the new school construction here in Saint Michael, and relying on labor that has included little more than student work during 45 -55 minutes time periods, the students of our school have successfully constructed much of what will be a 20 x 40 foot building including two enclosed shipping containers.

What do Ponzi schemes, plate tectonics, and Diego Rivera have in common? They were all covered in this year's Academic Decathlon theme of The Great Depression.

On February 7, 8, and an unforeseen 9th, 18 Bering Strait students met in Brevig Mission to compete in ten academic categories, all having to do with the Great Depression. The Academic Decathlon is an annual high school academic competition organized by the non-profit United States Academic Decathlon Association. The competition consists of seven multiple-choice tests, two performance events, and an essay. The ten events require knowledge in many academic disciplines, as well as reading a hefty novel-this year's choice was The Grapes of Wrath.

Students complete 50 question tests in 30 minutes.

The seven tests are in art, economics, language and literature, math, music, science and social science. The relay event–known as the "Super Quiz" –is a multiple choice final event. These topics, with the exception of math, are thematically linked each year. Previous topics have included The French Revolution, Latin America, and the Civil War.

Students spent months studying Depression-era art, music, social science, math, economics, literature and science in order to compete for gold, sliver and bronze medals in each category.

Savoonga: (not in order) Courtney Toolie, Tiffany Immingan,Ida Kava, Judy Pelowook, Jaylene Miklahook, Sheryl Noongwook, Darly Kingeekuk, Coach Kristina Sieff.

In between tests and essays, students shot hoops, practiced their speech and interview techniques, and listened to some Depression era blues on their iPods. A few students whose previous competition was limited to athletics found the event surprisingly invigorating.

"Who says this is boring? Academic Decathlon is fun!" announced a novice decathlete from Stebbins.

Brevig Mission: Mary Crockett and coach (and gracious host) Angie Alston.

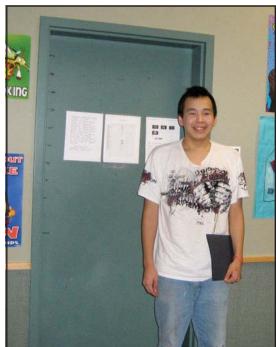

Academic Decathlon has been a Bering Strait District event for many years with varying levels of participation from schools. Savoonga has fielded a team for over a decade. This year's team, coached by third year veteran Kristina Sieff, had many seasoned decathletes. Brevig Mission's lone contender Mary Crockett-coached by host Angie Alston-did so well in her first competition that she earned a place on the State team. White Mountain's team was schooled by Sheri Skelton, a veteran decathlon coach. Stebbins team of 7 was instructed by Karen Beranek. Each of the four schools placed students on the State team.

Cody Murphy beams after a successful interview round.

Due to weather issues preventing a return to everyone's respective sites, those earning a place on the State team were up by seven a.m. Wednesday morning, and after a rousing breakfast of cornflakes and toast (and cold pizza), gathered in the Brevig Mission library to complete their timed on-line essays on the Steinbeck book, The Grapes of Wrath, which are submitted to the State judges in advance of the Anchorage competition.

Skills Camps

Students from all over the Bering Strait School District traveled to Unalakleet for an intense skills camp session, to prepare them for the math, writing, and reading portions of the HSGQE Standards Test. They were instructed by Jim Nelson, Tammy Dodd, Mosaddeque Reza and Theresa Davis.

The top 9 qualifiers at the Bering Strait District Competion were sent to Anchorage for the Alaska State Academic Decathlon Competition, where they earned Second Place for the Small Schools competing in all Alaska, missing first place by a mere 137.7 points with a total score of 23, 796.6.

This year's team consisted of Mary Crockett (KTS), Samuel McElwee (WMO), Jaylene Miklahook (SVA), Cody Murphy (WBB), Rayna Nassuk (WMO), George Otten (WBB), Judy Pelowook (SVA), Vincent Tomalonis (WMO) and Danielle Waghiyi (WBB). Team Coach, Kristina Sieff (Teacher at Savoonga), and chaperone, Ed Becker (Asst. Principal at Stebbins) accompanied the team. In the past two years the Bering Strait Team has placed third in the Small Schools category.

The Bering Strait School District salutes its decathletes district-wide, at every level of competition, including those who were unable to attend this year due to family emergencies and health issues. See you next year!

A Message from the School Board

By Rob Picou, Superintendent, BSSD

On behalf of the School Board of the Bering Strait School District, I would like to thank everyone for all of their hard work during the school year. As we prepare for summer vacation, it is important that we remember to read. Parents, please turn off the television this summer and plan for your children to spend time with books. The learning that students have accomplished during the school year can be greatly enhanced if we continue to focus on learning during the summer.

As your child's first teacher, you need to guide them during the summer more than any other time of the year. Please talk to your children about safety and about books all summer long while the school staff is on vacation. It is our greatest hope that you and your family enjoy the rich harvest that is provided by this beautiful land we call Alaska. It is also our hope that you are able to provide for your children a sense of cultural identity and subsistence life skills.

To our teachers and classified staff, we want to say thank you. We all know the hard work of teaching happens in a classroom where you are charged with the job of motivating kids to learn. We appreciate your efforts and genuinely hope you have a restful summer vacation with your families wherever you call home. Thank You!

Students, make sure you read this summer. Do not let the long days go by without finding time to read. Knowledge is power. When you read and learn, you develop the power to make choices with your life. Don't waste your time. Keep your mind focused on the future and READ!

Thanks to all and have a joyful summer!

Building in St. Michael continued from Page 1...

Construction was begun in the fall of 2010 and has included students ranging in age from 2nd grade through 12th grade. Students of every age level helped in constructing roof trusses, while site preparation and piling work was completed by middle and high school students. Due to weather, we took a break from work on this project during 3rd quarter. Even so students were exposed to, and willingly faced the very real Alaskan elements which are common to parts of early and late winter.

And though we expect to have a very useful building when we are done, the most important thing I can say with confidence and no small amount of pride is that we are building some great young people here in Saint Michael. I can't think of a better outcome in education in any pursuit than to be able to say, "We aren't building things, we're building people."

Music In Unalakleet

By Timothy Wolcott, Jr.

This year has been my first teaching in bush Alaska, and I must say, it has been a wonderful experience. I was a bit uneasy about taking a music position in a small village at first, but when I learned about the resources they have here and how well the program is supported, I relaxed and started to focus on the area that matters to me most: the students.

All year has been an exciting learning experience for both me and the kids. One of the major activities that we completed already was our holiday concert back in December. Other than that, high school students have focused mainly on our regional music festival, which took place last month in Dillingham. One student earned a rating that sent her to the state music festival in Anchorage, where she again was awarded with the opportunity to perform for the community.

My elementary program is primarily focused on the fundamentals of music: beat keeping, reading, and singing simple melodies. I try my best to make these activities engaging and fun for them; I want the young students to have a solid understanding and overall feeling of music. When they reach 4th grade, they are allowed to play an instrument or sing, allowing them to explore music even further. My goal is to create an atmosphere where music is something that students enjoy learning about; this idea will in turn fuel and expand the high school program, where music is essentially an elective.

Overall, I am very happy and consider myself lucky to be in a village where music is supported by our district and the community as a whole; without them, arts programs do not survive. Thank you to all who have shown support of music in Unalakleet and the students. I am looking forward to another exciting year!

BSSD athletes give solid performances at state NYO meet

By Jeff Erickson BSSD activities director

With some significant losses to graduation, the Bering Strait School District Native Youth Olympic team may have had reduced expectations this year, but one could never tell by the excitement and anticipation that the 15 athletes exhibited on their arrival to Anchorage last weekend. Each had been crowned champion in the district meet and was prepared to give their all against the state's best.

The team did nothing but rise to the occasion and they did it with a quick start as diminutive eighth grader Apaay Campbell (Gambell) destroyed the field in the Kneel Jump to grab the gold medal. This was followed by solid performances by each BSSD athlete the first and second day. While not making the medal stand almost everyone gave top-10

The anticipation began to build as the high kick events neared. With his record performance at the district meet, Ûnalakleet's Stuart Towarak eyed the bigger state title. As the highest returning kicker from 2010, high hopes were expected. Golovin's Tahnee Esparza also had high hopes. Regardless of her height, she had gone higher in every event than ever before, breaking the 2-foot record at the district meet.

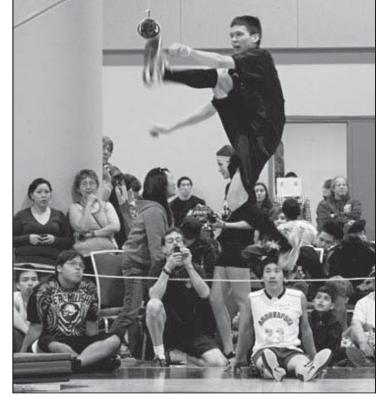

Then, what often happens did...an unexpected performance by a previously unknown athlete changes the game. Son of legendary high kicker Brian Randazzo, Brian Jr. emerged with a bang and a world-record tying 2-foot kick of 101 inches, easily eliminating all other contenders.

Stuart had to settle for a very respectable 4th place.

Esparza ran into a more expected nemesis, the world record holder, Alice Strick. Tahnee still managed a remarkable 3rd and 4th respectively in the two- and one-foot events.

The final high kick event was set up for greatness, with whispers of the incredible world record of 114 inches being broken. Randazzo and Towarak emerged from the pack leaving the other competition behind, jumping higher and higher. With a kick of 108 inches, Towarak went past his personal and district best, but couldn't stay with the eventual champion who finally topped out at 111 inches.

NYO is a remarkable event for so many reasons, and this year was no

Well before Nome High School basketball star Christian Leckband became the 2011 Class 3A Player of the Year and had different colleges jumping on the bandwagon, the University of Alaska Anchorage was already onboard. One could say the Seawolves have been riding shotgun for years.

They were the first team to actually start talking to me and recruiting me, so my interest in them has been there for a long time," Leckband

The 6-foot, 5-inch swingman rewarded that loyalty by staying home and signing a letter of intent to play for the Seawolves, joining a program that seems to make the NCAA Tournament every year.

"I have a lot of desire to go to UAA." he said.

Leckband poured in 1,056 points during his three-year varsity career and helped the Patrick Callahancoached Nome Nanooks win 70 of 87 games, including 40 straight at home. He averaged 23 points and 9 rebounds as a senior, highlighted by a careerhigh 39 points against Barrow.

He seemed to rise to the occasion each time Nome played a large school, averaging 25 points against 4A teams. He pumped in 34 points against 4A state champion Bartlett.

"I get a lot more pumped up when I know there's a lot of competition around me," he said. "I just seem to play a little bit better."

He's come a long way since the days when he was a skinny five-foot, nine-inch freshman who filmed Nome's home games.

In just three years he went from cameraman to showstopper. "I come from humble beginnings," he said.

But he didn't make this journey

"I've had a lot of help throughout

Uninvited camping guest

By Thomas Tocktoo

(Thomas is a student at the Koyuk Malemute School.)

One morning last summer my brother Austin, my brother Joey, my parents, my grandma, Ruthy, and I went camping up river. We got our camping gear and headed up to camp. When we got there we set our stuff down and put it all in the wall tent. My mom and dad went to go set our net for fish.

While they did that, we set up camp by bringing the propane stove and silverware to the table.

After my parents came back, Joey and I played around while the adults drank coffee and waited until they had something to do. Then after about a couple of hours we checked the net and cut and washed fish. After that we cooked dinner and Finally it was night and we had to bring our dad home.

We dropped my dad off at home and then we went back to our camp. While we were going just right above Ethel's berry camp, my mom turned a little bit too sharp and we kugisak (bumped into ground) into the mudflat.

We were stuck there! So my mom got out and pushed the boat, then about five minutes later she told me to get out and push -so I did.

All of a sudden a big brown bear came out. My mom and I were so scared! The bear come running from somewhere, probably a lake or something. Ten minutes after we saw the bear my mom had to shoot, because it was really close. She shot right over it. The bear ran like 30 feet back and slowly walked back. By the time the bear got to the water, we finally got to deep water and the bear was just watching us. We were so thankful and happy. We got to our camp and we happily went to bed.

My mom and I were very proud that we made it to our camp. We staved up before we went to bed for the night before making sure that bear didn't come around anymore. My mom and I thought it came around because of the commotion in the water and odor of our fishy boat.

In the morning my dad came because he didn't have any work until the next day. We did the things we usually do, and the next morning we went home happy as anything before.

The global burden of cancer:

Preventing a worldwide killer

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Cancer is rapidly becoming one of the most common causes of death worldwide according to the American Cancer Society.

The trend is seen most clearly in developing nations where cancer is now the third leading cause of death. The rise in cancer rates seems to be an unintended consequence of good global health policy. People are living longer, due largely to a reduction in infectious diseases like tuberculosis, cholera, malaria, and AIDS, but they are not living healthier. Much of the increase in cancers worldwide is directly related to what doctors call "modifiable risk factors" such as tobacco use, physical inactivity, and calorie-dense nutrient-poor dietary habits.

There is also a disproportionate cancer burden on developing regions from cancers caused by largely preventable infectious disease like hepatitis B, hepatitis C, and the human papilloma virus (HPV). The percentage of cancers attributed to chronic infections is around 26 percent in developing nations verses 8 percent in developed regions of the world.

Many people are concerned that exposure to military and mining waste chemicals increases the risk of cancer. Researchers do not yet know the extent to which chemical exposures increase risk for rural Alaskans; however, there is strong evidence that the risk of cancer increases exponentially when two risk factors are combined. For example, the risk of lung cancer in someone exposed to asbestos is very high if the person is also a smoker.

According to the American Cancer Society there are four priorities for preventing cancers from known causes.

First, stop smoking and discontinue other forms of tobacco use. Tobacco is the single largest preventable cause of cancer and premature death worldwide. Experts have identified at least 15 different types of cancer directly related to smoking. Over 80 percent of these cancers involve the lung or airways, though smoking also increases the risk for bladder, kidney and pancreatic cancer.

In the Norton Sound region, two out of every three people are current smokers, with an even higher rate of people exposed to second hand smoke. This is one of the highest rates in the world. Unless this trend changes drastically, the burden of cancer in rural Alaska will become one of the highest globally.

Second, manage weight and increase physical activity to maintain a healthy body mass index (BMI). Obesity, defined as a BMI above 30, is associated with an increase in breast, uterine, colon, and kidney cancers.

Third, avoid preventable infectious diseases known to cause cancer. Chronic Hepatitis B and hepatitis C infections are associated with 75 percent of liver cancers globally. The human papilloma virus (HPV) is the leading cause of cancers of the cervix and uterus worldwide. A vaccine is available to prevent infections with both Hepatitis B and the more virulent forms of HPV.

Avoiding risk behaviors including multiple sex partners and needlesharing (including tattoo needle sharing) are the only way to prevent alternate forms of HPV and hepatitis C, for which there is no vaccine.

Fourth, keep up with screening. When prevention fails, screening exams provide the best chance for early detection. Pap smears, colonoscopies, mammograms, and prostate exams are all designed to catch cancers in their earliest and most treatable stages.

Many people fear cancer. But people can reduce their risk factors for cancer in order to decrease the likelihood of contracting certain types of cancer. Each generation learns more about what causes cancer and how to prevent it. As each generation learns more about cancer prevention, it is imperative that they leave a legacy for their children by instilling in them healthy behaviors that lead people away from this destructive disease.

Saying it Sincerely

Rev. Karen Sonray, Our Savior Lutheran Church for the Nome Ministerial Association

"For everything there is a season; a time for everything under heaven." Ecclesiastes 3: 1

Hunters are watching the ice and the horizon, scoping out possible gifts from the creation to bring home and share. Young people are graduating, ending one chapter of their lives and starting another. People are preparing for camp and the upcoming season. There is a rhythm to life.

Birds are returning. Some have flown miles and miles. Last year about this time, an elder asked me as she looked overhead and watched several geese, "Did you thank God? My mother always said a prayer when she saw the first geese return each spring, 'Thank you God for bringing back the birds to us again."

Mysteriously the birds know when and how to return. They display the rhythm of the creation. We depend on that rhythm, the seasonal changes. This time of the year microbes are stirring within the soil. In oceans deep sea mammals and fish are feeding and traveling. Somehow they all know, they too hear the "call" toward new places and new waters. They all reflect the majesty of God, the stupendous creativity of God's handiwork.

Often in scripture we hear that even the creation expresses joy: "The mountains and the hills before you shall burst into song" (Isaiah 55). The best poetry is "heard" in God's works.

As we approach this time of the year, find the song within you. Give God thanks. Pray with your family. Teach them how to live a thankful life. Let your spirit soar and say a prayer, "Thank you God. It is good to be here."

Gambell whaling captain lands three whales this season

By Diana Haecker

Gambell whalers landed three whales in last month's whaling season, and whaling captain Llyod Apatiki – at age 30 the youngest captain out there – caught them all with his small crew of brother and striker Abel, and his uncle.

Apatiki said they caught the first whale on April 14, the second on April 19 and the third around April 28. The first two whales were caught about 10 miles out. For the last whale, they had to take their boat with a 65-horsepower motor 18 miles out to sea.

Apatiki said that there were eight crews out the day they caught the first whale. "It was choppy water, except for when we were closer to the ice," he remembered. "We were hunting all day and then finally toward evening, we struck the whale." All the other crews helped Apatiki tow in the 29-foot whale.

Apatiki's luck was with him for the rest of April and he brought home two more whales and meat to fill freezers in Gambell. When asked what the secret of his success is, he said, "You just have to believe that you will land a whale." Apatiki also caught two whales last year. "This month, we are walrus hunting now," Apatiki said. "But I still see whales out there."

Gambell has eight strikes per year and is allowed five more strikes in the winter whaling season. "I love hunting," Apatiki said. "Hunting is my life." Apatiki became a walrus hunting captain at age 17 and a whaling captain at age 20.

Meanwhile, Savoonga whaling captains also succeeded to strike and bring home two whales. But it was a challenge to get whales for Savoonga this year, said George Noongwook. "The whales seemed to have changed their migration route this year and went further out behind the ice toward Gambell," said Noongwook

On April 14 captain Frederick Kingeekuk landed a 54-foot male and a few days later, on April 18, captain Wilson Okoomealinguk, Sr. landed a 49-foot male bowhead.

Noongwook said that there is an abundance of bowhead whales and that the species sees a growth rate of 3.4 percent. "It's just that access gets harder," said Noongwook. Thirty years ago, whalers had a window of four weeks to hunt and wait for good conditions: now the window is down to less than a week sometimes."

Noongwook is talking about climate change but he said although opportunities to gain access to their prey dwindle, there are signs that people do adjust to change quickly. "I am very proud of how our hunters are adapting to these changes," Noongwook said.

He agrees with Apatiki in Gambell that this month's walrus hunting has been difficult. Apatiki said there arelots of ice and walrus, but they are mostly in water instead of resting on ice where they can be hunted. Noongwook said that there is still a lot of ice in front of Savoonga and that hunters succeeded in bringing home two walruses on Mother's Day.

Congratulations

Jaylene Wheeler has been appointed to the Alaska Public Health Association. She is of Inupiag and St. Lawrence Island Yupik descent. She is the mother of one child, was born and raised in rural Alaska and currently resides in Anchorage. Jaylene earned a B.A. in Rural Development from the University of Alaska Fairbanks in 2002 and, most recently, served as the assistant vicepresident of Community Health Services at the Norton Sound Health Corporation in Nome. She has worked in the public health field since 2000 and is exploring graduate school options. To be most effective, she believes health promotion and disease prevention efforts must address core issues relating to adverse childhood events, nurture health family systems and reflect community priorities.

Nome Community Center Board elects new Executive Director

The Nome Community Center Board of Directors has elected David Elmore as executive director for the Center. Elmore has been in Nome and on the staff there for 2 1/2 years as a program coordinator and recently as the acting director following the resignation of Lance Johnson. He and his wife Julie Elmore were co-pastors at Nome's Community United Methodist Church, where she will continue as pastor.

Elmore has a Masters in Theology and a Masters in Civil Engineering. Prior to coming to Nome he served as pastor at two churches and for many years as a civil engineer, including six months in Iraq. He anticipates being ordained in the UMC in June this year. Elmore says that in this time of shrinking financial resources nationwide, his focus will be to continue the vital work of the Center with children, families, and seniors, to find new sources of funding, and to seek more ways to work with other community organizations to focus where the most need is in Nome and the region. The newest program of NCC is the Nome Children's Home. Other long-term and well-known programs are XYZ senior meals, Youth Court, Adult Day Care, Food Bank, Smoking Cessation, Family Services, Under-age Drinking prevention, and several more. The main offices of NCC are upstairs in the Nome Community United Methodist Church. The Board has 14 members and several active committees that welcome community members.

Siu and Aleutian No. 1 unwrap gift to BSWG

A unique partnership between Siu Alaska Corporation, the Aleutian No. 1 and the Bering Sea Women's Group means that a successful crabbing season in the Bering Sea will help support the organization that combats domestic violence and aids abuse victims in the Norton Sound region. That partnership has paid off for the women's group this April in the form of a distribution of more than $37,000. "The crew of the Aleutian No. I is very proud to be working on behalf of the Bering Sea Women's Group," said Siu Alaska President and Chief Executive Officer John Eckels. Siu is a wholly owned subsidiary of Norton Sound Economic Development Corp.

The recent payout marks the second distribution received by the Bering Sea Women's Group since it was gifted 25 percent ownership in the vessel in 2009. The regional organization has now received more than $47,000 in distributions as a result of its ownership stake.

TO BE WED- Patrick Dean Octuck is very proud to announce that Dawn Marie O'Connor has accepted his proposal to marry him. They are planning a springtime wedding that will be held in Nome. Invitations will be sent out as soon as a wedding date has been set.

Good commercial chum salmon harvest predicted for Norton Sound

By Laurie McNicholas

The 2011 commercial chum salmon harvest in Norton Sound may rival or even exceed last year's catch of 117,000 fish, reports Jim Menard, area manager for Norton Sound and Kotzebue, Alaska Dept. of Fish and

The 2010 commercial chum catch was the best in Norton Sound since 1986 when 149.912 chums were harvested, according to ADF&G statistics. From 2005 through 2009 the average annual commercial chum catch was 19,140 fish, and in the 10year period from 2000 through 2009, the average yearly commercial harvest was 12,341 chums.

"Chum salmon runs are expected to be above average, and more commercial fishing targeting chum salmon is expected in 2011," said Menard. "Buyer interest in chum salmon has been increasing in recent years, and the harvest could be 90,000 to 120,000 fish. Chums in the 2006 age class are coming back to Norton Sound as five year olds, and they did well as three and four year olds."

Scott Kent, ADF&G's assistant area manager said commercial fishermen in the Unalakleet and Shaktoolik subdistricts will take a majority of the 2011 chum harvest. Last year their combined catch— 40,483 chums in the Unalakleet subdistrict and 30,588 chums in the Shaktooklik subdistrict—accounted for 60 percent of the harvest.

ADF&G anticipates a weak run of Norton Sound Chinook (king) salmon this year, and no commercial fishing is expected. Kent said if Chinooks return to the Unalakleet River in low numbers or subsistence fishing is restricted, no commercial salmon fishing will be allowed in the Unalakleet or Shaktoolik subdistricts until July 1. "On July 1 there is still a good chunk of the chum run," he

tions for chum salmon are expected only in the Nome subdistrict where catch limits will be in effect. Commercial fishing for chum is closed in the subdistrict. The following explanation for chum fishing restrictions in the Nome subdistrict is from an ADF&G publication by Menard and Daniel J. Bergstrom, Norton Sound Subdistrict 1 (Nome) Chum Salmon Stock Status and Action Plan. 2010: a report to the Alaska Board of Fish-

The Alaska Board of Fisheries classified Nome subdistrict chum salmon as a stock of management concern in 2000 due to the stock's chronic inability to meet escapement needs. From 1999 through 2005, Tier II chum salmon fishing restrictions limited the number of permit holders who could fish for chum salmon in the subdistrict. In 1999 the chum subsistence harvest in the subdistrict totaled only 337 fish.

The subdistrict reverted back to Tier I subsistence fishing regulations in 2006 because projected runs of chum salmon exceeded the amount necessary for subsistence. In 2007 the Board of Fisheries accepted ADF&G's recommendation to reclassify Nome subdistrict chum stock from a management concern to a yield concern, which is less severe than a management concern.

From 2005-2009 a majority of chum salmon escapement goals were achieved, but yields were low compared to historical yields in the 1980s. In 2010 the Board of Fisheries decided to continue the yield of concern classification for the stock. Last year ADF&G issued 494 Tier I subsistence permits in the Nome subdistrict, 372 of which fished and caught a total of 3,124 chums.

Golovin, Elim chum concerns

The board of fisheries has classified the chum salmon stock in Norton Sound subdistricts 2 (Golovin) and 3 (Elim) as a stock of yield concern since 2000 due to a chronic inability to meet escapement needs. From 2005 through 2009, subsistence chum salmon harvests averaged 1,767 in the Golovin subdistrict and 1.216 fish in the Elim subdistrict. according to a report by Menard and Bergstrom to the Board of Fisheries in December 2009. In most years since 2003, chum runs have been insufficient to allow for a commercial harvest in either district, the report noted. (See Norton Sound Subdistrict 2 (Golovin) and Subdistrict 3 (Moses Point) Chum Salmon Stock Status and Action Plan, 2010; a Report to the Alaska Board of Fish-

However, the 2010 chum run was strong enough to conduct a commercial chum harvest and reach escapement goals in both subdistricts. Nineteen permit holders harvested 23,630 chums in the Elim subdistrict, and nine permit holders took 16,984 chums in the Golovin subdistrict, according to preliminary figures Menard provided in an end of season summary. ADF&G data show the 2010 subsistence chum catch totaled 3.124 fish in the Elim subdistrict and 1,133 fish in the Golovin subdistrict

Pink, sockeye, coho runs

Menard said the 2011 pink salmon run is expected to be above average for an odd numbered year. "If there is buyer interest, then the harvest could be 50,000 to 100,000 pink salmon," he noted. "A harvest of this magnitude would be dependent on pink salmon directed fishing periods. However, with the expected good run of chum salmon, fishermen and the buyer will likely be targeting the more valuable chum salmon.

"The coho (silver) salmon run is expected to be average based on good ocean survival conditions in recent years," Menard continued. "The commercial harvest is expected to be 60,000 to 90,000 fish and no subsistence fishing restrictions are expected, except for catch limits in the Nome subdistrict."

A poor run of sockeye (red) salmon is anticipated in the Port Clarence district, so the commercial fishery is expected to remain closed, Menard reports.

2010 harvest values

Commercial fishermen harvested a total of 211,622 coho, pink and chum salmon last year in the Norton Sound district. The gross value of the catch to 115 permit holders was $1.2 million, an average catch value of $10,613 per permit holder, according to ADF&G's 2010 Norton Sound Salmon Season Summary.

Last year in the Kotzebue district, 67 permit holders harvested 270,343 chum salmon for a gross value of $860,125, an average catch value of $12,837 to the permit holder, ADF&G reports.

Norton Sound commercial herring fishery a go for 2011

Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. has reached an agreement with Icicle Seafoods that will again bring a commercial sac roe herring fishery to the region this year.

Icicle Seafoods will bring a processing vessel to Norton Sound to purchase herring from resident fishermen. Icicle will also bring four tender vessels to the region to facilitate the fast-paced fishery. The Norton Sound fishery generally opens three weeks after the Togiak opener farther south. Current estimates would put this year's Norton Sound opener, which is always subject to change, at the end of May.

The harvest target for 2011 is set at 1,000 tons. Fishermen will be paid on a sliding scale according to the percentage of roe recovery. Fish with recovery of less than 7 percent are directed to the bait fishery. The price per ton is based on roe percentage as follows: Bait, $50; 7%, $190; 8% $210; 9%, $230; 10%, $250; 11%, 270; 12%, 290; 13%, $310, 14%, $330; and 15%, $350.

Fishermen must sign up with Norton Sound Seafood Products to participate in the fishery. NSEDC has a limited amount of herring gear for sale through the NSEDC Revolving Loan program or the Fishermen's Receivable Account. Those interested in participating in the fishery are strongly encouraged to contact Norton Sound Seafood Products prior to the opening to ensure timely receipt of gear. To sign up for the fishery or inquire about available gear, contact the NSSP Unalakleet plant at (907) 624-3014 and ask for Operations Manager Reese Huhta, Assistant Manager Frank Doty or Office Manager Liz Ivanoff.

The fishery mainly targets herring roe, which is sold as a luxury food item in Japan, often given during the holidays as gifts. Fish that do not meet the roe requirements will be sold as bait for other regional fisheries Last year's sac roe herring fishery—the first held since 2006—attracted nearly 30 boats from the region. While the bulk of the herring catch occurs between Tolstoi Point and Stuart Island near St. Michael and Stebbins, and around Cape Denbigh near Shaktoolik, fishermen from all over the region participate.

plan should include a base for emergency oil spill and rescue response. Baker said the Alaska Dept. of Environmental Conservation and each of the tank farm operators have a stash. Kristenson said Shell will have a barge in summer months with nothing but oil spill response equipment on it. In 2007 the company published a 56-page booklet titled, Shell's Beaufort Sea Exploratory Drilling Program Oil Spill Prevention and Response.

Causeway ramp dock study

The commissioners and Baker discussed a study prepared by PND Engineers for a proposed third dock at the causeway and a roll-on, roll-off (ro-ro) ramp that allows cargo to be efficiently rolled on and off a vessel. Baker said a third causeway dock is needed because the city dock and West Gold dock are extremely busy. "This dock would be universal," she said. "It could be for a cargo barge, cruise ship or research ship, and while building it, it's wise to include a ro-ro ramp in the design."

The PND study includes four design options for the project. Three designs would place the third dock between the city dock and the West Gold dock, and a fourth would situate the dock at the west spur of the causeway. Baker weighed in against the latter location. She also said she does not like designs that extend the third dock out into the turning basin beyond the faces of the city dock and West Gold dock.

Discussion centered on a design placing the third dock between the two existing docks with its face aligned with the city dock. That design places a ro-ro ramp at the north end of the West Gold dock and calls for mooring dolphins for barges at that location. Commissioners said the dolphins would be a problem in ice conditions. Baker noted that the third dock won't be constructed this summer, but commissioners need to select a design concept for PND to develop.

Harbor floats anchor system

A new anchor system for two floats in the small boat harbor used by fishing vessels and other small craft is needed because ice has moved all of the piles except the head pile and they are badly out of alignment, Baker told the commissioners. They discussed a PND design for a new anchor system to remove the piles and collars, install a continuous long link ground chain at mud line between two fender piles on the low level dock and two fender piles on the opposite fish dock bulkhead, and connect vertical float chains to the ground chain.

PND estimates the cost of the new float anchor system at $153,915. Baker said the price is a bargain compared to the cost of realigning the pilings. West asked whether the chains would be removed in the winter. Baker said they would be left in place. It is too late to do the project this year, she added.

Barge ramp expansion

The commissioners reviewed a PND plan to repair the city's barge ramp at the port, repair the barge ramp mooring dolphins, and provide additional capacity for the ramp. Baker reminded them they had discussed the plan, dated Sept. 20, 2010, with a PND representative at their last meeting in October 2010.

"The existing City of Nome Barge Ramp has been in service only about seven years," the PND plan states. "The appearance of the ramp on June 14, 2010 revealed that the base material is being overloaded and is suffering a loss of bearing capacity. There were small mounds of free sand and gravel visible on the ramp that had apparently been pumped from below the ramp and deposited between the concrete plank joints by the pressure of wheel loads. This action can be halted to prevent future deterioration of the concrete planks."

Baker noted that PND recommends placing grout below the planks rather than rebuilding the ramp over compacted gravel to decrease the bearing pressures. The PND plan states: "Rebuilding the ramp would probably be more expensive that building it was, because of the difficulty of removing concrete planks below water."

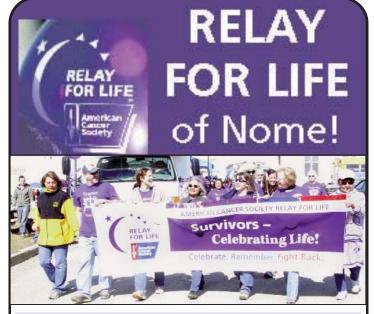

Baker said she has talked with a local concrete provider who has equipment to pump grout under the planks, and the work can be done without taking the ramp out of service. When the commissioners select a ramp repair plan, the city will apply for a permit from the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, and the plan will be reviewed by agencies such as the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game and the U.S Fish and Wildlife, Baker added.

Commissioners discussed technical aspects of pumping grout under the barge ramp planks with John Blees of Bristol Environmental Engineering, who attended the work session. They made no decisions about the barge ramp repair, a new anchor system for the floats or a third causeway dock during the work session

The Port Commission will conduct a regular meeting Thursday, May 12 at 5:30 p.m.

Brown bear mauls Wes Perkins near Skookum Pass

By Sandra Medearis

Wes Perkins, 54, received serious head injuries when a brown bear mauled him in the wilderness north of Nome Sunday afternoon. The attack occurred in the Skookum Pass area in the direction of Mile 52 or so on the Nome-Council Road. A helicopter evacuated Perkins to Nome where he was put aboard a medivac flight to Anchorage. After having his condition stabilized. Perkins went to Seattle, according to Alaska State Troopers. Perkins underwent five hours' surgery Monday morning and was reported in critical condition in the intensive care unit at Harborview Medical Center.

Perkins currently works as area supervisor at TelAlaska in Nome. His public services include working with the Nome Volunteer Fire Department for 32 years and serving as chief for seven years. He currently serves as president of the local ham radio group SPARC. He has served many hundreds of hours as a member of Nome Volunteer Ambulance and is training officer.

Perkins, Edward Stang and Dr. Daniel Stang (local dentist) were on a spring bear hunt via snowmachines when they sighted a brown bear. They began to track it by snowma-

While the bear was lying down by a creek in deep snow, Perkins, ahead of the Stangs, passed the bear by about 70 feet, according to trooper accounts, and turned around. Sources say he got off his snowmachine to take a photograph. Then the bear charged Perkins, who was not able to elude the bear. The other men shot the bear, which went away and died. Later, the men skinned the bear and

Rock Creek draws up closure plans

Still looking for buyers

By Diana Haecker

Although Rock Creek mine owner NovaGold Resources Inc. is still looking for buyers of the idle gold mine, state regulators have been meeting with company engineers to discuss closure plans in the eventuality that NovaGold's board of directors decides to close the mine for good.

NovaGold company spokeswoman Rhylin Bailie said that the company is still soliciting offers to buy the project, and that there were a number of expressions of interest. In an email she said that NovaGold is only willing to sell the project to a company that would be successful, with the operations expertise and the balance sheet to advance the project. This, she said, reduced the number of potential buyers.

Bailie said that in the meantime NovaGold is preparing a closure plan to be well prepared for whatever decision NovaGold's board of directors makes: sale or closure.

The Rock Creek gold mine was meant to mark the transition of NovaGold from an exploration company to a production company. The mine was permitted and built, but failed to be fully commissioned in

PND Engineers to design third causeway dock, barge ramp Port Commission selects concepts for major construction projects

By Laurie McNicholas

The Nome Port Commission gave PND Engineers a go-ahead on design work for four proposed port and harbor construction projects at a meeting on May 12. The designs are for a third causeway dock in the outer harbor, a new barge ramp north of the existing barge ramp in the inner harbor, repair of the existing barge ramp, and a new anchor system for two floating docks in the small boat

The commissioners unanimously approved an amended version of PND's "option A" design for a new causeway dock extending between the city dock and the WestGold dock. The amended design will include a 100 foot wide bay in the dock and a roll-on, roll-off (ro-ro) ramp. Barges will be able to nose into the bay and use the ramp to efficiently roll cargo on and off the vessel. The commissioners want the new dock built as close as possible to the city dock and aligned with its face. PND is to develop the concept to a 95 percent design status.

"If we can get the 95 percent phase design, we could chase permits and funding," noted Harbormaster Joy Baker. She said the permitting process is expensive, takes time and will involve an environmental assessment.

PND's original option A concept centers the new dock between the city dock and WestGold dock and

Letters -

Dear Editor,

I want to congratulate Miss Marjorie Tahbone on winning the title of Miss Indian World 2011-2012. I am from the Ponca and Cherokee Nations and was raised in Oklahoma. I was raised in the circle of our traditional dances and ceremonies. Where I come from, having a title such as this is a tremendous honor; it can easily be compared to that of Miss America.

The people of Nome, all of Alaska, and Alaska Natives should feel equally as honored to have one of our own be chosen for this very prestigious title. I can say that I was in attendance at The Gathering Of Nations Pow-wow when her name was called.

Marjorie accepted her crown in front of a sold out crowd of 18,000 cheering people. My heart was bursting with excitement and happiness, which could only be a minuscule of what she and her family felt. So please, let's give our Miss Indian World a fitting welcome when she returns home, as I can be sure she will get the red carpet rolled out for her when she visits many of the villages, reservations, nations, and tribes across the states and through out the world as she represents Native people everywhere as Miss Indian World.

Congratulations, Marjorie! Know that we are so very proud of you and you have our love and support wherever this journey leads you! Lily Fawn White

Hey everybody,

Wow, every year it seems that I am at awe at how fast the snow melts and the ice turns to water and we see ground. It makes me so excited 'cause then we are that much closer to picking berries. Just like seeing green, 'cause there are greens that are edible that I can go pick and give away, so I can go back out in the country and pick some more in the relative peace and quiet.

I just hope that I'll be able to afford the gas to go. So far we have been lucky here that gas is $5.15 a

A Major Responsibility

A new crop of young Americans is graduating from our high schools and colleges. We have invested heavily in their education and we hope they have learned the most valuable tool for their future and the future well being of this nation— how to think.

We hope they have learned to make informed decisions. We hope they have learned not to be duped. We hope they have a strong sense of ethics. We hope they are critical and logical thinkers who don't give blind allegiance to blow-hard billionaires and religious fanatics. We hope they can see through lobbyists and snake oil salesmen. We hope they will take an active role in government and care enough about America that they vote. We hope they care enough about steering us in the right direction. We hope they become productive members of our community who work hard to build and manufacture goods, who aren't afraid of hard work and diligent continued learning. We hope they aren't swallowed up by greed and the pursuit of money. We hope they care about their community, wherever they may call home.

We have high hopes for the class of 2011. They have a bright, shiny future and we have great hopes in their ability to be responsible citizens and see us through the years ahead with clear vision and faith in our great nation. -N.L.M.-

gallon. Although every time we receive an oil/gas delivery the price goes up, we are praying it won't go up too much—which is ridiculous, being as oil comes out of our land. So why do we have to pay so much? I really would like to know.

So they say that by importing the oil it helps with relations with the other nations, but what about the economy within our state? Do they even think of how it affects us?

What is so wrong about making a refinery in Alaska? It may have its down side, but I think it's safer that the Pebble Mine. Besides, it creates jobs for our people— as long as they do local hire.

And for those communities who do not have Food Bank of Alaska in their community, I would seriously consider implementing it. Times are going to be harder, especially since they haven't raised our cost of living pay like they raised the prices of everything else. We need to make sure our communities are being fed.

Remember—no matter what time of the year it is, you must always tell someone where you are going and for how long. Stay safe, pack accordingly and enough in case of any kind of emergency. Who knows—you might save someone's life by doing so.

Hope you all have a safe spring and summer. Remember—don't forget to give to our Elders: after al,l they did those things before we did, and probably miss doing so.

God Bless you all. Remember prayer is powerful.

Karen Nanouk Unalakleet, AK 99684 Dear Editor,

The indigenous people live in a delicate balance. We have lived in two worlds since the western world came and settled on our lands. Throughout the many years we have assimilated and adopted the western lifestyle. We have become educated in the western schools to learn their ways while still attaining close ties to and acquiring the skills and knowledge from our subsistence lifestyle. We strive now to both make a living in the monetary system and gather food from the land and ocean we love. Overall, we still live in our rural hometowns because it is home.

Often our lands and oceans are being sought for their minerals and oil. We have had both foreign and domestic companies exploring on or near our lands. Some came without us recognizing their intentions and some have posted ads wanting to consult with the tribes about their future activities. What questions can we ask them? What do they ask us?

Will they ask us what time of the year we catch beluga, seals, and fresh crab? Will they ask us what fish we cut and dry? And how important it is for us to put wild greens and berries away for the winter months? Will they ask us why we continue to live here? Will they ask us how important is it for us to have clean water? What can we ask them?

I personally would like to ask them in what condition they have left prior lands they have previously mined or drilled. For example, how are the health and well-being of the indigenous people after they have mined uranium or drilled? Are we still able to drink the water and eat the wild greens? Have the indigenous people profited from the mining? Can our children and their children's children up to seven generations still live in a healthy environment if they pursue the mining or drilling?

When they look at us, what do they see? Do they know that even without a college education we have elders, hunters, and gatherers who know the country and ocean because they observe and study the natural world around them when they hunt, fish and gather edible greens and berries? The indigenous people hold unwritten PhDs on land management, marine mammals, birds, caribou and fish migration simply because they have lived on their community lands, some all of their lives. They observe and notice changes in weather and ice patterns. They have the wisdom and knowledge (first-hand accounts) that have been passed down to them.

To conclude, we live in a delicate balance. I would like for the staff of these oil and mining companies to see a people who will live in their communities for many, many more generations to come. Respect us, regard our land and livelihood, talk to us about OUR future, listen to us, look at our children like they are yours and consider how future planning will impact them.

ARRIVAL OF LAST WINTER MAIL AT NOME -MAY, 1906 — It took about 10 days to get a letter from the Interior to Nome in 1906. Today our "Snail Mail" has become "Dog Sled Slow" due to funding cutbacks to the U.S. Postal Service by the government in Washington, D.C. This team has pulled in on the Bering Sea ice south of town. Note the pile of trash in the background. Nome used to recycle all its trash on the ice in those days.

News from around the state

Disaster team surveys flood damage at Crooked Creek

The state's disaster response team flew to Crooked Creek last week to provide emergency services and inspect damages to homes and public buildings in the aftermath of last week's flood raging through the Kuskokwim village. On May 8, the village experienced seasonal ice jam flooding and the National Weather Service River Forecast Center reports that water levels may have reached 30 feet above normal levels.

The next day 53 of the village's 105 residents were evacuated to the nearby Donlin Creek mine exploration camp.

Evacuations had to happen quickly, without time to pack. Whole homes were taken off their foundation and flooded. The general store in Crooked Creek also suffered damage. On Friday the evacuees were able to return to Crooked Creek. Red Cross volunteers are also in Crooked Creek to determine what is needed most. At this point, the Red Cross asks for monetary contributions and takes donations via their website www.alaska.redcross.org.

The state has not yet issued a disaster declaration.

Deacon arrested for sex abuse of a minor

Anchorage Police have arrested Richard Taylor, 61-year old deacon at the True Vine Ministries in Anchorage last week and charged him with multiple counts of sexual abuse of a minor. The victim - whose age was not revealed by police - told detectives that Richard Taylor had been touching her inappropriately on several occasions for almost a year and a half. Police say that Taylor would give the girl money each time that he touched her. The victim also told the detectives that she could "probably guarantee she was not the only person" Taylor had abused. Detectives are not releasing the connection that Taylor had with this victim in an effort to conceal her identity. Taylor was arrested on May 13 and was charged with three counts of sexual abuse of a minor and one count of attempted sexual abuse of a minor. Taylor was booked into the Anchorage jail with bail set at $20,000 cash/corporate plus a third party custodian.

Arctic states sign SAR treaty

Eight states with interests in the Arctic met last week in Greenland to discuss management of natural resources and the impact of climate change. While climate change rarely means good news to Arctic locals, resource development and transportation companies see riches in the northern oceans. US Secretary of State Hillary Clinton also participated in the meeting and said that the eight states were "going to raise the visibility of Arctic issues."

The US, Russia, Canada, Norway, Finland, Iceland, Sweden and Denmark attended talks together with indigenous inhabitants of the region. On Thursday, they signed an Arctic Search and Rescue Agreement. The new treaty requires Arctic council nations to coordinate with each other in the event of a plane crash, cruise ship sinking, big oil spill or other major disaster. The treaty also is the first legally binding agreement to be reached by the circumpolar intergovernmental forum.

UAF installs first ocean acidification buoy in Alaska waters

Researchers of the University of Alaska at Fairbanks last month placed the first buoy to help scientists understand how climate change may be affecting the pH level of northern seas. The first buoy is at the mouth of Resurrection Bay, near Seward. A second buoy will be deployed in the Bering Sea this month, and a third will be placed in the Chukchi Sea in October.

The data collected by the buoys will be sent to scientists in real time via satellite.

Ocean acidification is the term used to describe increasing acidity in the world's oceans. As carbon dioxide levels rise in the atmosphere, the ocean absorbs it like a sponge, making seawater more acidic. Scientists estimate that the ocean is 25 percent more acidic today than it was 300 years ago.

Alaska exports total $4.2 billion

Last year marked a record year for Alaska exports with $4.2 billion in 2010, which is an increase of nearly 27 percent over 2009. Overall U.S. exports grew by 20.97 percent. The state's 26.95 percent rate of increase in 2010 over the previous year placed it 13th among states and Washington, D.C.

On a per capita level, Alaska ranks in the top 10 exporting states. The value of Alaska's seafood exports was $1.8 billion in 2010, up 12.2 percent, buoyed in part by the best salmon harvest in 18 years. In total, markets in Asia accounted for 73.1 percent of Alaska's seafood exports in 2010 while exports to the European Union market accounted for 19.9 percent.

The value of Alaska's total mineral ore exports was $1.3 billion, up 56.9 percent. Alaska's zinc and lead ore exports accounted for the majority of mineral export value. Copper ores mined in Canada and exported via the Port of Skagway accounted for $39.2 million of the $1.3 billion. Red Dog Mine is the world's largest zinc mine and accounts for 79 percent of U.S. zinc production.

In 2010, countries importing more than $100 million of Alaska's ore exports were China, Japan, Canada, Korea and Spain. The value of Alaska's precious metal exports, primarily gold, grew 39.9 percent on rising global prices, to $213.4 million, with $209.3 million of gold going to Switzerland and $3.7 million to Canada.

The 2010 combined range of Alaska's energy exports — liquefied natural gas, refined petroleum products and coal — totaled $418.3 million, an increase of 27.4 percent over 2009. Alaska's 2010 export of forest products grew 33.4 percent to $117.1 million.

President Obama calls for opening NPR

In his weekly address, President Barack Obama spoke about the economy picking up steam but that the biggest burden for economic growth and the consumer is the price of gasoline. Obama came out to say that the US should increase oil production. "To do this. I am directing the Department of Interior to conduct annual lease sales in Alaska's National Petroleum Reserve, while respecting sensitive areas, and to speed up the evaluation of oil and gas resources in the mid and south Atlantic," Obama said.

He said the government should lease new areas in the Gulf of Mexico as well, and work to create new incentives for industry to develop their unused leases both on and offshore. He also said that his administration is extending drilling leases in the Gulf of Mexico and Alaska that were impacted by the drilling moratorium following the Deepwater/Horizon disaster. Obama also spoke up against subsidizing oil companies when they are making near-record profits. Congress is to vote next week on legislation that would do away with oil subsidies.

Hungry bears on walkabout for leftovers

By Sandra L. Medearis

Brown bears (grizzly bears) have awakened and left their dens. They are currently very hungry and combing the tundra for whatever they can find for food.

A Nome hunter, Wes Perkins, 54, was seriously injured in a bear encounter Sunday near Skookum Pass.

Mostly, food means carcasses of animals left from predator killings and animals that have not fared well over the winter, according to Peter Bente of Nome, a wildlife biologist with Dept. of Fish and Game. When they are looking for food early in the season before there are wild berry crops, fish and other food available, the bears are not focused on regular routes to good pickings and seasonal

This means we humans can encounter brown bears in unexpected places, like anywhere. "They are lean and hungry and on the prowl, covering the landscape," Bente said. 'They are opportunistic. If they find winter kill, carrion, they are going to protect it.

When the snow melts bears are going to favor where carrion is going to be available—moose in a valley who starved during the winter, or caribou who met wolves on a hilltop, or they may take down a moose.

A few bears come out of dens at the end of March. The latter part of April and May is a good time to expect brown bears to come out of dens and start to hunt for food, Bente said. As soon as the ice drifts away from shores, bears will walk the beaches to find carcasses of seal and whales, other mammals.

"They know from memory where they are likely to find them," Bente

He reviewed some measures people can take to lessen the chances of meeting bears:

- Plan a route with good visibility—avoid dense willow thickets.
- Female bears coming out of dens with cubs are especially protective. Keep a wide distance between a route and where sows and cubs have been sighted.
- Be aware that bears generally sleep or nest down in the bushes to cool down during the bright part of the day.
- · "Bears are active in twilight hours," Bente said. "Mid-day there is more opportunity to surprise bears. A surprised bear is a potentially very dangerous bear. They are not sure what you are. They have a fight or flight trigger, so avoid thickets where they might lie down." Bente, who has studied the ways of birds for decades, said he has seen more bears during early morning nesting surveys from 2:30 a.m. to 5:30 a.m. than at any other time.
- · Keep a clean camp. Back packers should store food at a base or in a separate place, not leave it along the trail. Dispose of food in tight containers.
- · Carry a firearm? Personal choice, Bente said. Some people prefer to carry protection while others want to trust their ability to detect bears and to avoid the most likely places for encounters.
- Bente cautioned that the advance in technology is making people want to take the risk of taking photographs and videos to share on social networking.

Finally, the bear facts are these: We share the bears' habitat. "We want to be sensitive to human injury, but we have to realize a bear is a wild animal," Bente said.

the fall of 2008 when the ore crushing circuit and water accumulation problems complicated things. Bailie said that the company decided not to continue commissioning the property back in 2008 because of mechanical complications and also because of the global financial and credit crisis. "We needed to conserve our finances to advance our core projects," she wrote.

The Alaska Department of Natural Resources large mine coordinator Jack DiMarchi said that state regulators met with representatives from NovaGold last Friday to talk about the draft closure plan that has been presented to them. He expects a final plan proposal in a month or so and then state regulators will go over it with the goal to approve the plan by November. Closure would involve taking down all the buildings, ripping up the roads, breaching the tailings storage facility dam, removing the frozen tailings back to the mine pit and recontouring, reseeding and resurfacing the land. The surface rights of large portions of the mine complex belong to Sitnasuak Inc. and the Bering Strait Native Corporation holds the sub-surface rights.

Jack DiMarchi said that Rock Creek is permitted now, but the two required state permits are going to expire this summer. Those permits are a Department of Natural Resources approved reclamation plan and a Department of Environmental Conservation approved waste management permit. "If they want to close, we'd extend those permits until closure," said DiMarchi. In the event that the mine will be sold to another mining outfit with the intention to have Rock Creek go into production — or if NovaGold changes their mind and start it up again new permits are required. DiMarchi said that there are enough problems with the mine now that would require a re-write of the current per-

Potential buyers had approached state regulators to find out what would be involved to get Rock Creek permitted again. DiMarchi explained that first an environmental audit would need to be done - something that takes about a year. Depending on the results of the audit, new permits would be drawn up and the whole process of permitting would start all over again. It could take at least two years to have the permits in DiMarchi said that by November he expects the closure plans to be finalized. However, it is still up to NovaGold's board of directors to give orders either to tear the mine down or to continue to look for buyers. There is no time line set for the decision. NovaGold still employs 30 people on site. Bailie also confirmed that Rock Creek, Big Hurrah, the land holdings and the sand and gravel business in Nome are up for sale.

salvaged it, according to trooper re-

The hunting partners called for help on a hand-held radio. Troopers received a report of mauling just before 4 p.m. A Bering Air helicopter took Perkins back to Nome where he was received by Norton Sound Regional Hospital. He was then flown to Anchorage and then to Harborview Medical Center in Seattle.

On Monday, Alaska Department of Fish and Game biologist Tony Gorn and Alaska State Trooper Brian Miller flew out to survey the area.

ADF&G wildlife biologist Peter Bente said Monday that brown bears on the peninsula are emerging from their dens in April and May-very hungry after months of hibernation. In such a state, the bears are ranging far and wide, looking for left over carrion from predation on moose, caribou and the like, or the carcass of a moose that starved during the winter. They are likely to be more unpredictable.

When they find food like this, they are very protective of it," Bente said. People should anytime in the season take routes with good visibility, avoid clumps of thick willows, and be as alert as possible while bears are out of their dens, especially during the lower light hours of twilight and dawn.

Port Commission concepts for construction projects

aligns it with the city dock, but the concept does not include a bay or a ro-ro ramp. The company provided the following rough order of magnitude (ROM) cost estimates for its initial option A: $6.5 million for a dock with a 120-foot face length, or $7.3 million for a 450-foot face length.

PND prepared schematic drawings and ROM cost estimates for four design options for a new causeway dock. "Fill docks were considered for this study since these docks have shown good performance with the Nome conditions," notes the draft Causeway Ramp Dock Study prepared by PND. "Platform docks have disadvantages including bearing pile exposed to large ice force, a more limited capacity and are much more costly than bulkheads for Nome conditions. Further cost studies have shown that the tied-back bulkhead is significantly more expensive than an OPEN CELL® bulkhead."

Docks constructed of a natural or artificial fill surrounded by a vertical wall are considered fill docks, according to Internet sources. Cellular sheet pile walls are among the types used for fill docks. PND holds patents on the OPEN CELL system. The system uses flat sheet piles manufactured by Gerdau Ameristeel and extruded connectors manufactured by Pile Pro, according to a PND brochure titled OPEN CELL Sheet Pile® Technology. The brochure provides aerial views of OPEN CELL bulkheads at a number of sites in Alaska and in other states. It also includes a photo and diagrams of a circular, OPEN CELL system.

New barge ramp concept

PND submitted drawings to the Port Commission showing two concept ramps north of the existing barge ramp, a 60-foot concrete structure that was installed in the inner harbor just west of the Snake River entrance in 2005.

"The existing barge ramp has been significantly overloaded," wrote Garth Howlett of PND in a letter to Baker dated Nov. 23, 2010. "The barges typically have to ground their hulls on the ramp in order to get their drop down ramps as high as possible on the concrete ramp. They invariably have to leave the bottom end of the ramp in the water making transiting more difficult for equipment using the ramp.

"We suggest adding a second ramp and bulkhead north of the existing ramp specifically for these larger barges," Howlett continued. "The smaller boats could continue to use the existing ramp. The new bulkhead would retain the bottom of the ramp at about +3' MLLW and allow full dredge to -8' MLLW in front of the ramp. This would allow the barges to come in fully loaded without bottoming out, drop their ramps and exit without having to drive the equipment through the water."

Both of PND's concept ramps include a vertical bulkhead, a concrete sloped ramp, two shore bollards and two fender dolphins, among other features Garth listed in his letter to Baker. He said the company developed ROM engineering estimates for two options—a Z-pile option and an OPEN CELL ramp. Sheet pile costs for the Z-pile option were more than $100,000 higher than for the OPEN CELL® BULKHEAD, so the Z-pile option was not further developed, he added. He said the ROM estimate for the schematic level OPEN CELL ramp is $1.5 million.

The Port Commission unanimously adopted a motion for PND to develop the OPEN CELL ramp design to 95 percent status.

Barge ramp repair planned

The commissioners reviewed 95 percent design drawings for repair of the existing barge ramp and of fenders on dolphin piles. The ramp has been overloaded by heavy vessels and has settled, cracking some of the precast concrete planks, PND notes. The company recommends grouting the voids below the planks between the timber sleepers that support the planks. PND's plan also would provide a longer vertical curve in the approach grades to the ramp because the existing grades cause bottoming out of low-slung trailers.

Baker said she has talked with a local concrete provider who can pump grout below the concrete planks, but she doesn't know what quantity will be required.

Commissioner Charlie Lean said engineers can measure the sag in the ramp and determine what volume of grout is needed to level the ramp. "We don't know if the sleepers have settled into the mud," he noted. He suggested that engineers develop worst case/best case scenarios to estimate the volume of grout needed for the project. The commission adopted a motion for PND to provide such information.

Floating docks anchor system

The commissioners discussed plans for a new anchor system for two floating docks in the small boat harbor that offer protected mooring for recreational and fishing vessels. PND provided 95 percent design drawings for a plan to remove four existing float piles that have been jacked or moved by ice and replace them with a chain anchor system. A continuous long link ground chain will be installed at mud line between two fender piles on the low level dock and two fender piles on the opposite fish dock bulkhead. Float chains will connect to the ground obtain

PND provided an ROM cost of $153,915 for materials and labor to install the new anchor system. Baker said Bristol Environmental Engineering will help prepare a bid request for the project. The commissioners discussed various methods for removing the piles and their collars. They approved a motion for PND to complete the design for the new float anchor system.

Getting rid of Lulu

Commissioner Jim Adams asked

Baker about plans to remove the sunken barge, Lulu, from the outer harbor. All members of the Port Commission have agreed the sharp metal deck of the barge is a safety hazard for youth who play on it and use it as a diving platform.

"Just throw it out for bid," suggested Commissioner Jim West, Jr. Baker said she will work with the city attorney and city manager to develop a bid proposal for the project this summer.

New doors for Garco Building?

Baker asked the commissioners to consider whether they want to replace three overhead doors on the Garco Building, or instead replace the building with a new and more attractive structure. She said the doors are still useable. Pioneer Door Inc., an Anchorage firm, submitted a price of $36,912 to replace the 18-foot wide doors—$20,912 for materials

School Board approves the 2003 minibus purchase

It's not too late for K-6 summer school registration

By Lori Head

With the school year winding down, and the FY12 budget submitted to the city, it was essentially some tidying up of policies and revisiting a tabled action item at the Nome Board of Education's regular session of May 10, 2011. Among the four board members present, the $10,000 buyout of a 2003 minibus, previously co-owned with NACTEC, was unanimously approved.

Carol Caplinger-Lemons' contract to teach jr/sr high special education next year was also approved. Upon that approval, the district now only seeks a candidate for the junior high school counselor position.

Board policy updating

Nine first readings of board policies were also approved. They were mainly AASB (Association of Alaska School Boards) recommendations of new policies or changes to language or federal and state compliance of existing policies. The new policies included: BP 4161.1 Certificated Personnel – Sick Leave; BP 4040 Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996

(HIPPA) and BP 3305 Electronic Fund Transactions. The amended, existing policies were: BP 3512 Equipment; BP 4161, BP 4261 Leaves; BP 5125 Student Records; BP 5125.1 Release of Directory Information; and BP 5125.2 Challenging Student Records.

Action item "BP 4170, 4270, 4370 first reading" on the agenda was tabled due to lack of inclusion in the board packet.

Broadband is on the way to Nome

By Sandra L. Medearis

GCI plans to bring broadband Internet service to Nome by 2013. Meanwhile, GCI's hybrid fiber optic—microwave network is moving broadband service forward across southwestern Alaska this summer in Phase I. The next phase will go to Unalakleet next year and then to Nome in 2013.

GCI executives visited Nome May 11 to let people know about the $88 million stimulus project called TERRA-SW that is funded with a $44 million grant from USDA Rural Utilities Service and a $44 million loan to United Utilities, Inc., a GCI subsidiary. Before the project heads up the coast to Seward Peninsula, the company is connecting 65 communities and around 9,000 households with terrestrial broad band in the Bristol Bay area and the Yukon-Kuskokwim Peninsula. GCI will offer wireless broadband Internet service in each community. The focus of the project is to get community Internet services off the satellite and onto the ground.

A new fiber-optic network is going from Homer to Levelock on the Kenai Peninsula. From Levelock to Quinhagak, via Iliamna, the company is building a new microwave network, a sort of modern White Alice relay tower system. The Yukon-Kuskokwim Peninsula will see an upgraded GCI microwave network that will extend to Grayling.

The project includes nine fiber segments, needing 290 miles of marine and land-based cable; seven cable landing stations; and 14 new microwave towers, and will be able to carry multiple Internet, voice and data services.

The project will hookup and bring nonprofits like schools, Native organizations and health services into the modern era with lightning communication. GCI executives say the system will improve cell phone coverage and reliability to help local businesses and foster economic development by connecting local communities to the world and their customers. Cell phone antennas will be mounted on the new TERRA-SW towers.

Pearl Mikulski stressed the importance of smooth, fast service for the Telemedicine system and schools, noting the growing importance of electronic transmissions of grant applications and even the Permanent Fund Dividend applications.

Will the new networks mean reduced prices? Not necessarily, said Paul Landes, senior vice president of marketing, because of the number of upgrades, he said. The benefits will come in more services upgrades and better product packages GCI can offer.

Jim Stimpfle emphasized the big move to wireless, and that businesses are offering free wi-fi to attract customers. He also pushed an idea to allow village people to use wireless free when it was not being used by schools and other public organizations. Jimmy Sipes, GCI vice president of networks said the company recognizes the shift from wired to wireless services and is costing out wireless hot spots for villages and businesses.

The local Nome GCI operation employs six people and has a payroll of $440,000, according to Landes.

Fifty to 60 folks showed up for the GCI "show-and-tell" session and enjoyed soft drinks or adult beverages with seafood cocktail hors d'oeuvres and other goodies.

DREDGE #5 — Currently this dredge sits idle to the northeast of Icyview. This photo of Dredge #5 was taken sometime between 1941 and 1948 shortly after it started. This may have been the most advanced Yuba Gold Dredge in Alaska. (It was manufactured in Yuba City, California.)

Dredges: An historic testimony to hard work in Nome's past

By Charlie Lean Pioneer Igloo #1

The gold dredges dotting the land around Nome represent more than decaying machines. They are a testament to the region's history, tenacity and ingenuity.

Walk about an old dredge and its history will seep out and grip you. They are reminders of how incredibly hard it was to get and work heavy equipment in the frozen tundra. They evoke the hard working conditions of a bygone era; an era of long days full of mosquitoes, rain, loneliness and raw beauty. There was pressure to get as much as humanly possible accomplished within a short 3-4 month season. Equipment required constant troubleshooting, occasionally documented by notes on the walls of a dredge. Mistakes would be costly, both financially and physically. I remember men with missing fingers or worse.

Let's be careful that our ties to this colorful past do not get cut off as well.

There has been significant concern recently that the large dredges in Nome might be demolished for the value of the metal in them. One could argue that owners have the right to do with them as they will. Legally that is true. To many here in Nome, it would be akin to plowing under the family homestead.

When visitors arrive they often ask, "What are those large buildings out on the tundra?" or "Is that a dredge, how does it work?" The number of people who can answer are fast disappearing. Did you know that Dredge No. 5, behind Icy View, is an example of a top-of-theline, large-production dredge, built by the premier manufacturer of gold dredges? Or that the Swanberg Dredge, on Nome's east end, is an example of the economy model dredge marketed by a mid-range manufacturer for more marginal operations and with a more limited project life?

Gold dredging was full of intrigue. There were liars and cheats. There were technology breakthroughs. There were fuel crises. There was even drunkenness and violence, and the army had to be called in to settle dredging rights. How many families of Nome, Candle, Council, Deering and Solomon have generations of dredge miners?

The fuel costs are what did away with coal and bunker crude oil. Diesel and gasoline were found to be more efficient. Electricity was even more efficient. Here in Nome we still buy electricity from "Nome Joint Utilities," a carry-over from the days when USSR&M, the mining company, jointly supplied electricity with the city power plant to the town. Cold water ground thawing was developed here at Nome, when it was realized that ground could be thawed even with cold water. This innovation made placer mining economic all over Alaska and Russia.

If the dredges were to disappear, there would quiet and bitter feelings against those that allowed the demolition. The town's sense of self and its pride in being a mining community would diminish. And it would be so much more difficult to explain gold mining. I know a number of the Pioneers of Alaska, museum staff, or just some local folks who would be flattered to help with educating interested people on the history of gold dredging and could enhance their lecture with interesting asides. Just walk around one of our local dredges with a friend, and I bet you will find yourself stopping again to check out another.

Legislature passes capital budget, adjourns

By Diana Haecker

Twenty-seven days into the special session of the 27th Alaska Legislature, the House and the Senate adjourned after passing a $3.18 billion capital budget. In the end, the Senate agreed to pass the budget without contingency language that was at the center of the gridlock between the House and the Senate.

For the better part of the regular and special sessions, the House and the Senate locked horns over language in the Senate version of the capital budget bill that tied all statefunded energy projects into a one package, meaning that if the governor would chose to veto one energy project, the whole package would have died with it.

Senator Donny Olson (D-Nome) explained that early on in the session, Governor Sean Parnell had threatened to use his veto pen on energy projects for districts whose Senators didn't support the his proposed oil tax roll-backs. In order to prevent projects being vetoed not on lack of merit but for retaliation, Senators added the contingency language that bundled energy projects together.

Early last week, Senators passed a $2.8 billion budget on to the House. The House in turn added projects worth $300 million and struck the contingency language. On Saturday night, the House passed the budget and gave it back to the Senate and adjourned.

Now it was in the Senate's court to either budge or risk another gridlock in a second special session. Senator Olson said, "We would've liked to go into conference committee but the House adjourned and we had to take it [the capital budget] or leave it.'

In the end, Olson said that there are a few projects in the capital budget that didn't sit well with rural legislators, because so much of energy projects did go toward projects in the railbelt area. These include $200 million for an instate gas line from the North Slope to the railbelt that went into the bill without hearings or analysis. Another big ticket item included in the bill is the funding for studies to further the Susitna Hydro project with $65 million and funding for the Mount Spurr geothermal project - all benefiting communities along the railbelt that enjoy cheaper energy prices than rural Alaskan villages

In the end, however, the Senate passed the capital budget that the House gave them. Before the special session the Senate suggested to have a cool-off period between the regular and the special session to allow legislators to go home, take a break and come back to take a fresh look at things. But the House rejected the proposal and preferred the special session immediately following the

He said it was the worst atmosphere that he experienced in his whole career as a legislator. "It was very disheartening to work in an atmosphere of distrust," Olson said. Hostilities were fought out in the media and through press releases. The rift separated the GOP-dominated House, which was more aligned with Governor Sean Parnell's wishes, and the Senate, which took a more critical stance at high profile legislation like the oil tax reduction act pushed by the Parnell administration.

The governor did not step in to mediate when things stopped moving.

Olson said that the impasse mostly was between the House and Senate leadership. He said that the working relationship with Representatives Neal Foster, D-Nome, and Kotzebue's Reggie Joule has been as tight as ever. "The fight was going on between House and Senate leadership. We [Foster and Joule] just fight for what's best for our districts. We cooperate, and that cooperation between our families goes back over many years," Olson said.

The last swipe came in the form of a last press release in which House speaker Mike Chenault, R-Nikiski accusing the Senate of untimely work. "I wish I could say we finished early and wiped the slate clean, but the fact remains: we could have avoided the special session had the Senate sent us a capital budget in a timely manner that respected our bicameral process and the separation of powers granted by the constitution," Chenault said. "We passed every item on the call during the regular session except the capital budget, because they never sent it to us. We asked that they honor the process. They didn't; we stood strong. It took 27 extra days to finish."

The governor also didn't mince words in his end of the session press release. "While I share Alaskans' frustration that the Legislature went into overtime over unconstitutional budget language pushed by the Senate Majority, I am pleased about some accomplishments that will foster economic growth and create opportunities for Alaska families, Parnell said.

The next step is that the governor will get the capital budget and can wield his veto pen to pare it down to his proposed spending limit of $2.8 billion by July 1 when fiscal year 2012 starts.

Governor Parnell called the legislators into a special session with the specific marching orders to take care of 10 bills. One of them was the capital budget, another the extension of the coastal management program, which is designed to give states a say in the development of resources.

pass an extension of the Alaska Coastal Management Program. Prior to the vote, a joint Senate and House conference committee met on a bill to extend the ACMP. The conference committee reached an agreement on the plan, but the House later voted down the agreement before adjourning.

Senator Olson was a member of the conference committee and said that one change in particular caused discussion in the House. The change sought to mediate when local knowledge contradicts scientific evidence and would put an agency in charge to study which side would prevail.

Rural legislators and House representatives supported the change, but could not muster one more vote to get the bill passed. This now allows the coastal management program to sunset in July.

At this point, Senator Olson said, it's not a big loss, as locals don't have a seat at the table anyway. 'There is no coastal management council as there was pre-Murkowski that allowed for input for local communities," said Olson.

The next session is likely to bring back the same questions, tackling energy and energy security for rural Alaska and coastal management issues. Olson said that he hopes that there will be an open dialogue between House and Senate leadership to avoid the situation where legislators become entrenched to the point where nothing is moving anymore.

There is no safe level of exposure to secondhand smoke.

All businesses licensed in Alaska are required to meet numerous health and safety standards to protect their patrons and employees.

Ventilation cannot protect against the dangers of secondhand smoke. It can remove smell, but not carcinogens.

Smoke-free workplace laws do not prohibit smoking, only where it can take place.

Everyone has the right to breathe smoke-free air.

Bering Strait School District NYO meet

GRAND ENTRY-Scotty Ashenfelter, left, Kira Eckenweiler, middle, and Andrew Kunayak carry the Bering Strait School District banner leading the BSSD NYO team in the grand entry to the Native Youth Olympic games, held in Anchorage from April 28 through May 1.

By Jeffrey Erickson, BSSD activities director

Springtime in Alaska may be cold, as the old Johnny Horton song says, but it is also bright...bright with the brilliance of the sun on the snow, bright with the optimism of the coming summer and bright with the culmination of the athletic calendar for our school's, Native Youth Olympics.

No sport does more to enrich and empower our students. None allows a greater variance of age, size and abilities. None can compare with the stirring performances and exhibition of extremely competitive sportsmanship.

The Bering Strait NYO meet was held in Teller for the first time this year, and the community came out to support and share in each of the 10 events. The 100+ students who flew in from 14 villages all shared in a hope to earn a gold medal which would give them a trip to the State tournament. Although anything can happen in these tournaments, there were still strong contenders from the year previous. Strength athletes like White Mountain's Scotty Ashenfelter and St. Michael's Iris Billingsley returned to regain titles. Iron-gripped Vincent "The Vincinerator" Tomalonis (also from White Mountain) looked to make it a "three-peat" in the Indian Stick Pull. High-flying Stuart "Birdman" Towarak was ready to take flight. The 2010 Most Outstanding Athlete Tahnee Esparza was bringing her all-around abilities back as well.

The action went on for two days, and results, while following form somewhat, belied the tenion and compelling action. District records fell, including two of the oldest, and when the smoke cleared, 15 athletes were named champion.

Some of the highlights included:

- Towarak soaring a remarkable 107" but needing all of it to hold off hometown hero George Okbaok. He broke the 16-year-old record of his cousin, Sam Towarak Jr.
- Both Ashenfelter and Billingslev needing to come back through the loser's bracket to claim Eskimo Stick Pull titles
- Apaay Campbell (Gambell) breaking the 20 year record in the Kneel Jump.
- Kira Eckenweiler (Unalakleet) breaking the 19-year-old record in One Hand Reach.
- Esparza breaking the Two Foot

High kick mark at 67". Esparza also repeated as Most Outstanding Female Athlete and was joined by Towarak, who received the most votes for Most Outstanding Male Athlete while being pushed by up and coming superstar Makiyan Ivanoff, who himself won two gold medals.

Walter Randolph Anagick "Gimbo"

Randolph "Gimbo", 70, was born on October 12, 1940 to McGann and Lena Anagick in Unalakleet, and died May 4,

At the tender age of 3 years, Gimbo's eldest sister, Laura Paniptchuk, and brother, Louie, took over responsibility and raised the children instead of sending them to a home after their parents had died from tuberculosis.

Gimbo attended the Covenant High School up to his Junior year and then joined the National Guard. On April 10, 1971, he married Alice Etageak at his cabin along the Unalakleet River. Completing Gimbo's life were his children, McGann and LaVerne. He also raised Langford, Jr. as his own and cherished his children, Kimberly, Langford III, and Chasity. On Sept. 1, 2005, Gabriel Gulat Gimbo was born, making Gimbo and Alice the happiest grandparents on earth. Gimbo and Gabe shared a very special bond, one would often see Gimbo picking up Gabe from school, teaching him how to drive the snowmachine, and taking him out to learn the subsistence way of life. They were inseparable.

Known not only as a hard working man but one with a sense of humor, he held many occupations such as a laborer, telephone lineman, firefighter, fisherman, electrician, just to name a few. He loved to make people feel special through his humor and quick wit, even through gifting many of his famous wooden or antler plaques, some of which had that sense of humor he was known for, others with biblical quotes or uplifting words of encouragement. Gimbo retired on June 30, 1998 after 16 years of dedication with BIA and 17 yrs with the BSSD Maintenance

Gimbo is preceded in death by this parents McGann and Lena; brothers Gabriel, Louie, Albert "Gulat" Anagick; sisters Clarabelle Weaver and Hannah Ahwinona; father- and mother-in-law Joseph and Anna Etageak; granddaughter Ada Saccheus, and his wife of 38 years, Alice "Brown Eyes" Anagick.

Gimbo is survived by his sister Laura Paniptchuk; children Lanford Adams Jr., McGann, and LaVerne Anagick; grand-children Kimberly, Langford III, Chasity and Brandon Adams; great-grand-children Colton and Hailee; and "the apple of his eye" Gabriel Gulat Gimbo Anagick; along with many family and friends.

Saying it Sincerely

By David Elmore Nome Community Center executive director, member of the Nome Ministerial Association

Reference: John 10: 1-10, Psalm 23

"Got Abundant Life?"

John 10:10 is one of my favorite verses in the Bible. But that's not all there is to this passage. There's his image of the shepherd that protects the sheep — an image that means little to us in northwest Alaska. What is it about this metaphor of God as shepherd that's so important? When I was in college I roomed with a guy whose family raised sheep. He told me "Sheep are stupid," which made this metaphor more meaningful. Sheep need a shepherd to protect them, not only from wolves and other predators, but from themselves.

Though the term "abundant life" may be associated with the Christian faith, the idea is by no means exclusive to Christianity. People of all stripes seek the abundant life. Whether spiritual or religious or not, we all seem to pursue that abundant life God offers through Christ. However, many do not pursue the abundant life through Christ but through other means.

We see this pursuit of the abundant life in many ways: the gold miners who will soon arrive seeking wealth on the golden beaches of Nome; the youth of our community who spend all night playing video games due to the unconditional acceptance they receive online; some pursue women, power, or position. Some even seek this abundant life through other faiths.

None of this is the abundant life that Christ promises. To understand abundant life, to understand this passage, we need to look back to John 9. After Jesus healed the blind man on the Sabbath, the Pharisees begin to investigate. Jesus uses this opportunity to contrast the former physical blindness of this man to the spiritual blindness of the Pharisees. And this comparison is not flattering, for it is the Pharisees that are blind in Jesus' reckoning. They are enjoying their position as the gatekeeper. They think they know what abundant life is. But Christ as the good shepherd is telling us that abundant life is so much more.

How have we lost sight of the abundant life that Christ offers? We have to remind ourselves of the Resurrected Savior who came that we might have life - the very essence of God brought to the world through the world by the Word who was Christ. Christ's mission in coming into the world was to bring life to all humanity; eternal life: a share in the very being of God through faith in

With that abundant life, we can have the sort of peace we see in the 23rd Psalm. With the abundant life, we can find peace in whatever position we find ourselves. Though we may walk through the valleys of stressful jobs, children who won't listen, parents who are too tough, war, famine, natural disasters, we can find peace in knowing that God is there with us as our shepherd, looking after us. All may not be fun, safe, exciting, but God is present in all situations looking after us.

and $16,000 for installation. Baker said the price does not include freight costs from Anchorage to Nome.

Twin Peaks Construction is leasing two bays and 6,000 square feet at the Garco Building through Aug. 19, Baker added. She said the uninsulated facility is used only in summer months, and she noted that an insulated building may be needed as the port becomes busier.

Commissioner Jeff Darling said if the building is on a good foundation, strip the tin, buy a liner package and insulate it. "If it's on a good foundation and it's got a good frame, why replace it?" he asked.

"It's not watertight," replied Baker.

Kristenson suggested it may be possible to negotiate improvements for the Garco Building as part of a lease agreement with oil company representatives. "I have a feeling this fall, next spring, a lot of stuff will be going up north," he said. If that happens, he foresees a need for storage space at the port.

Heartburn medications may weaken the bones

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Certain medications used to treat heartburn increase a person's risk for bone fractures according to a new study published in the Annals of Family Medicine.

The medications associated with an increased risk of fractures are called proton pump inhibitors (PPIs).

They block acid production in the stomach by inhibiting specialized cells, called parietal cells, from releasing protons. Common PPIs include: omeprazole (Prilosec); lansoprazole (Prevacid); esomeprazole (Nexium); and rabeprazole (Aciphex).

Doctors prescribe these medications to control acid reflux or to treat peptic ulcer disease. When used as prescribed, PPIs can reduce acid production by as much as 98 percent.

It is important to remember that most treatments that interfere with a normal body function come at a cost. The cost of long-term PPI use may be osteoporosis. This is because acid in the stomach is used to convert calcium to a form that can be easily absorbed in the intestines. Blocking acid in the stomach also blocks the body's ability to digest calcium, which can lead to bone loss and in some cases osteoporosis. human body is designed to borrow calcium from the bones when an adequate supply of calcium cannot be obtained from the diet.

Researchers compiled data from 11 separate studies and found that patients who take any PPI for a long period of time have a 30 percent higher risk of fractures.

There was no increased risk of fracture for patients who took older acid blocking medications, called histamine-2 (H2) blockers, like ranitidine (Zantac) or famotidine (Pep-

Applying this new data is difficult. Patients should not stop their medication without consulting their doctor. PPIs work extremely well for short-term therapy and in some cases they are necessary for long-term control of cancer-causing or ulcer-causing conditions associated with inappropriate acid production or acid reflux.

However, the new data gives us strong reason to consider alternate means of controlling stomach acid, especially in people already at risk osteoporosis like postmenopausal women or people on chronic steroid therapy.

It is helpful to remember a few basic guidelines regarding overall treatment for acid-related stomach problems:

- •Avoid known acid triggers: dark sodas (pop), tobacco, caffeine, chocolate, and peppermint are all known to either increase acid production or reflux symptoms.
- Avoid lying down for several hours after eating.
- Eat small frequent meals to avoid over-distention of the stomach.
- · Increase physical activity for at least 30 minutes daily. Physical activity promotes gastric and intestinal motility, in essence keeping the system moving forward.
- · Consider a calcium supplement with vitamin D if taking PPIs for extended periods of time. Research shows the fracture risk is much lower for people who supplement their diet with extra calcium. Calcium carbonate (Tums) acts as both a calcium supplement and a mild antacid.

• Use older H2 blockers like ranitidine or famotidine when possible. These medications only block 70 percent of the stomach's acid production. However, this may be enough to control symptoms without affecting calcium absorption.

Consider speaking with your doctor if you have been taking a protonpump inhibitor for a long period of time. In many cases, alternative ways of taking these medications can be developed which minimize risk of fracture while controlling of the symptoms of heartburn.

Elementary science project ends with a cold swim

By Tyler Rhodes NSEDC Communications Director

As Charlie Lean slowly tipped the gray, five-gallon plastic bucket, approximately 30 salmon—all tiny coho—gradually spilled into Anvil Creek, feeling a current for the first time in their short lives.

Nearly as soon as the little silvers hit the water May 11, they disappeared under the ice and snow that covered most of the creek that flows into the Snake River and then on to the Bering Sea. At that point, the fate of the fish was turned over to Mother Nature, and a year-long lesson for two classes at Nome Elementary School came to a close.

While it was Lean, the Fisheries Research and Development Director for Norton Sound Economic Development Corp., who had the honors of setting the fish free, it was the firstand second-graders standing on the banks who did the work to raise the fish over the school year.

The salmon in the classroom project allowed the young students in Mrs. Nikki Scherer and Mr. Matt Slingsby's classes to watch the silver salmon hatch from eggs and develop to the point where they could be released into the wild. A special, temperature-controlled tank was housed at Nome Elementary School where the students could watch the salmon develop as they fed the fish and made observations nearly every day.

The project served as a springboard for science, math, writing and art lessons throughout the year. The learning went on right up to the end of the project as the students peppered Lean with questions while he stood in Anvil Creek waiting for the water temperature in the bucket to match that of the creek. The queries varied from, "Why do fish get sick?" and "Why do fish eat bugs?" to "Do the fish have an adipose fin when they're born?"

As Lean answered questions, the students' raised hands dropped; following suit, the temperature of the water in the bucket fell to just above freezing, indicating it was time for the fish to go. The first-and second-graders craned their necks to get a peek as Lean slowly tipped the bucket, sending the silvers on their way. For the students, the science project had ended. For the little salmon, the adventure was just beginning.

Smith and NSHC go at it in court over firing

By Sandra L. Medearis

A jury of 12 began to hear evidence May 23 on whether Norton Sound Health Corp. should pay Greg Smith compensation for salary lost, even damages, after firing him last year. Smith was working as a clinician in the substance abuse department of the Behavioral Health Services. Smith is currently employed at another substance abuse program run by the state, Akeela House, locally through Dept. of Corrections.

Smith based a claim he filed against the hospital last May on wrongful termination.

wrongful termination.

Smith, through his attorney, Bob Lewis, argued that following a number of positive job evaluations, he received an unfavorable one in July 2009 from a person who had not been long on the job, but he had achieved a list of needed improvements handed him, and that implied a contract. NSHC broke that contract when a superior gave him a letter in January 2010 spelling out an intention to fire him, and broke an "implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing" with the dismissal, Smith said.

NSHC responded that Smith's employment was at will, that no cause was needed to fire him, and besides, administrators did have cause to dismiss Smith on the basis of not meeting all items on improvement lists and not meeting standards on his administrative—supervisory duties. NSHC readily conceded that Smith had been a good employee in his substance abuse treatment role, perhaps the "best they had," NSHC attorney James Juliassen told the jury in his opening statement.

NSHC said the issue with Smith came at a time when the NSHC substance abuse program was being skewered by the state at license renewal. A consultant had been hired,

"No Smoking" signs and symbols soon will be a common sight in public places and places of employment throughout Nome. The Nome Common Council approved by a 4-1 vote a "Smoking Pollution Control" ordinance following a public hearing at a meeting on Monday. Council members Jerald Brown, Mary Knodel, Josie Stiles and Jim West, Jr. voted yes; Stan Andersen voted no. Councilman Randy Pomeranz was excused from the meeting.

Nine of the 11 Nomeites who testified at the hearing strongly endorsed adoption of the ordinance. They were Angie Gorn, Dr. Karen O'Neal, Rose Attatayuk, Etta Tall, Kelly Keyes, Danielle Sylvester, Terry Sharp, Tara Schmidt and Lance Johnson. Several cited evidence that secondhand smoke can cause lung cancer, heart attacks and other illnesses.

Foster's Report

By Rep. Neal Foster

It's good to be back home and have a chance to catch up with you.

I had no idea in January that the regular, 90-day legislative session would go beyond the statutory limit and require a special session to work out differences between the House and the Senate. In the end – after 117 days of negotiations, maneuvering, and positioning – legislators approved state operating and capital budgets that take care of some of Alaska's most pressing needs such as energy, education, public safety, and revenue sharing.

As co-chairman of the House Special Committee on Energy, I was pleased to see approval of a package worth more than $480 million to make energy more affordable to more Alaskans. It provides a ringing endorsement of wildly successful programs that promote energy efficiency and cut home heating and electric bills by appropriating $126.5 million for state weatherization and energy rebate programs. This should go a long way to addressing pent-up public demand for these popular items.

The biggest disappointment was seeing a compromise on the Alaska Coastal Management Program die by a single vote in the House. Because of this, a system designed to encourage public participation in shaping a big sign on the Wien Building with the owner's name and phone development in local areas is now set to expire in July, thus making it harder for citizens to be heard by state and federal agencies on activities that affect them.

Although the legislative session is done, debate goes on about developing North Slope natural gas.

BP and ConocoPhillips, through their partnership known as Denali-The Alaska Gas Pipeline, have pulled out of their $165-million effort to get gas to market because of huge supplies of shale gas in the Lower 48. Some legislators question whether TransCanada and Exxon-Mobil's Alaska Pipeline Project will fare any better and are calling on the state to pull the plug on a venture that can spend up to $500 million in public funds.

On top of that, a state report on developing an in-state gas pipeline is due July 1. It may trigger another legislative special session that could occur as early as August or September.

The Operating Budget

We are lucky to live in flush times. Due to a robust state treasury, this year's $9 billion state operating budget provides full funding of education to the tune of $1.1 billion, an additional $20 million to help school districts deal with high energy costs, and $11.7 million to support vocational education.

The appropriations bill also has $20 million for community revenue sharing, thus providing a boost for local governments. It contains $1.3 million for Gov. Sean Parnell's initiative to add 15 more village public safety officers a year, allowing the total of much-needed positions to grow to 101. We need to thank the governor for his commitment to this and to the Department of Public Safety for swiftly moving to fill these jobs.

The new operating budget also takes a big step toward securing state aid for defraying high energy costs in rural Alaska by adding $400 million to the Power Cost Equalization Endowment. This brings that fund up to around $757 million – enough to generate approximately $32 million a year to pay for energy assistance.

The spending plan, which kicks in on July 1, also spends more than $22.4 million for senior benefits, a popular program that won unanimous support in the legislature when it came up for renewal this year.

The Capital Budget

The $3.2 billion capital budget makes giant strides in energy development — providing more than $486.4 million for a comprehensive statewide package of hydroelectric, wind, natural gas, geothermal, coalto-liquids projects as well as transmission lines, power generation upgrades, and energy conservation and efficiency programs. This should go a long way toward helping the state reach the goal of relying on renewable energy to meet 50 percent of its heating and power needs by 2025

House District 39 did well in the capital budget – netting $72.4 million for local projects. That includes $7 million for the Norton Sound Health Corporation's long-term care facility and $1.6 million for the Yukon-Kuskokwim Health Corporation's Qungasvik Youth Sobriety Project.

For more details about what else the budget had for the region, contact my office at 1-800-478-3789 or email me at Representative_Neal_Foster@legis.s tate.ak.us.

There's no doubt about it: the capital budget is big; thus, we can expect Gov. Parnell to use his veto pen on it. That's why I urge you to contact his office about the importance of each project in House District 39. Email your comments to him or his top budget adviser, Karen Rehfeld, at Sean.Parnell@alaska.gov and Karen.Rehfeld@alaska.gov. Or write them at: the Office of the Governor; P.O. Box 110001 Juneau, Alaska 99811.

Redistricting

A new plan redrawing Alaska's election district boundary lines is due by June 14. Redistricting happens every 10 years, but, this time around, there are some new challenges. Many rural areas have dropped in population or remained stagnate while the overall state population has grown. While House District 39 has grown in population from 14,996 to 15,642, we are still far short of the new district population ideal of 17,775. The job of the redistricting board is not to be envied. They have to come up with a plan that:

- Meets the population requirements per district based on the 2010 census numbers
- Keeps districts contiguous, compact, and socio-economically integrated
- Meets all the requirements of the U.S. Voting Rights Act and the Alaska Constitution

Often these items are in conflict with each other. For example, it's hard to keep a district compact when it lacks population density. Essentially, board members are trying to swim between Big and Little Diomede with their hands tied behind their backs. They're having substantial difficulty meeting all three of these requirements. If they cannot come up with a plan that does, the U.S. Department of Justice will draw these lines. That could be the worst of all outcomes because federal officials will likely give little consideration for traditional groupings or individual districts. Instead, their focus will be more on an overall plan. My hope would be the same as what I've heard from all of you: "Keep the district the same."

For good or for bad, legislators have no role to play in this process except to keep their constituents informed. My crystal ball tells me that no matter what plan comes down the line or who draws it, we can expect one thing: change.

Wes Perkins

My heart goes out to Wes Perkins who was badly mauled by a grizzly bear May 15 near Skookum Pass. Thanks to the prompt response from many amazing people, he was rushed to Harborview Medical Center in Seattle, where he is recovering from hours of surgery.

To help him and his family, the Nome Volunteer Fire Department – where Wes worked for 32 years, including seven as fire chief – has set up a bank account at Credit Union 1. Donations may be made to Account Number 514262, Routing Number 325272063 or mailed to the fire department at P.O. Box 82, Nome, 99762.

Firefighters also have launched a "Fill the Boot" fundraising campaign. Firemen's boots have been placed all over town. Any and all donations placed in the boots are appreciated.

Wes and his family need airline mileage to cut the costs of travel and would appreciate any that you can donate.

I hope you can join me in helping continued on page 15

News from around the state

Governor declares State disaster for Kuskokwim floods

Governor Sean Parnell declared a state disaster for the spring floods that damaged Crooked Creek and Red Devil on the Kuskokwim River. The Red Cross reports that two thirds of Crooked Creek's buildings are damaged or destroyed. The Red Cross set up an emergency shelter that houses 75 residents. Parnell has asked the Federal Emergency Management Agency to join the state in an assessment, which would determine if damages warrant federal assistance. The Alaska Division of Homeland Security and Emergency Management opened a disaster assistance center to give out information and help residents with damages to their homes and personal property to take advantage of the State of Alaska individual and family grant program.

On Sunday, Parnell visited Crooked Creek to meet with members of the community, survey damaged areas and to inspect the state's response and recovery effort.

In the northern Seward Peninsula, Buckland also experienced flooding. The National Weather Service reported rising water, flooding low lying roads adjacent to the river. The water went down by Friday but there were ice jams both up and downstream from Buckland. No damages were reported.

Alaska Redistricting Board appoints new director

The Alaska Redistricting Board appointed Taylor Bickford as its new executive director. Former director Ron Miller unexpectedly died in early May of a heart attack.

Bickford was the assistant director. The redistricting board is working toward a June 14 deadline to turn in the final redistricting plan.

Denali gas line project pulls the plug

Denali – the independent BP and ConocoPhillips project to bring North Slope gas to market is about to close because they couldn't find customer commitments to bring the $35 billion project to life. Denali president Bud Fackrell said that Denali is ending its efforts because of a lack of customer support. Fackrell said that Denali has spent over $165 million since 2000 and put in more than 760,000 man-hours. Governor Parnell said that this decision would free up ConocoPhillips and BP to independently become partners in another Alaska gasline project.

BOEMRE releases new EIS for Chukchi Sea lease sale

The Bureau of Ocean Energy, Management, Regulation and Enforcement last week released a revised draft supplemental Environmental Impact Statement for the Chukchi Sea Outer Continental Shelf Oil and Gas Lease Sale 193 that was held in February 2008. Native and environmental advocacy groups had sued the government for omitting important cumulative impacts from drilling in the first EIS. The District Court remanded the sale back to BOEMRE for further analysis. The agency said that the supplemental EIS addresses the specific issues identified by the court and public concerns raised during the comment period. It also includes an analysis of the potential environmental effects of a hypothetical very large oil spill. The agency is going to hold a series of public hearings in Anchorage and communities close to the lease sale area. The comment deadline is July 11, 2011; In 2008, companies bid $2.7 billion to lease 2.8 million acres of the Chukchi Sea, about 70 miles off Alaska's northwest coast. Shell Oil was the sale's high bidder at $2.1 billion. Shell plans to drill exploration wells next year.

Anchorage woman arrested for crimes against adopted children

Anchorage Police arrested a 50-yearold woman for abusing her adopted children. Anya James was charged with 10 counts of kidnapping and six counts of assault in the first degree. Between 2000 and 2010, James fostered and adopted six children, collecting over $750,000 in adoption subsidies from the state. Police said that all of the children were subjected to years of emotional and physical abuse. They were confined to small rooms and alarm systems prevented them from escaping. James also had video and audio monitors so she could monitor the children's activities and conversations. Inside the rooms, the children were forced to toilet in a kitty litter bucket, despite three working bathrooms in the home. James also restricted their diets, which led them to become severely malnourished, stunting their growth and preventing them from going through puberty during their teenage years. Some of the children that were taken from James in October 2010 were so malnourished they had to be hospitalized. James was booked into the Anchorage jail with bail set at $100,000 cash plus third party custodian.

Doctor Walter Soboleff dies at age 102

He created the first Alaska Native studies program at the UAF. State flags are flown at half-staff on Wednesday in honor of Dr. Soboleff.

Smoking ban

local businesses have decided on their own to become smoke free. The Board of Trade Saloon is smoke free for one night each week, and non-smokers show up there, he added. He said he would like to see an opportunity for smoking in a segregated place with good air exchange in a facility. He cited as an example the U.S. Senate and House dining room, which has an air-conditioned corner for smokers.

Louie Greene, Jr. said he made the cabs he owned smoke free for the safety of passengers. He said the decision caused problems dealing with some customers, and some drivers ignored the rule. Give business owners a choice to go smoke free, he urged.

Councilman Stan Andersen moved to amend the ordinance to eliminate bars from the list of places where smoking is prohibited. Councilman Jerald Brown seconded the motion for purposes of discussion. Andersen said most restaurants and cabs don't allow smoking, so the ordinance is aimed at bars. If a majority of bar patrons demanded that bars go smoke free, the bars would do so, he asserted. He said customers who rarely come to a bar are the ones who want it to be smoke free. The amendment was defeated by a 4-1

The new ordinance supplements State regulation of the use of tobacco and tobacco products. It prohibits smoking in the following places.

- All enclosed public places within the City of Nome.
- All enclosed areas that are places of employment, including office buildings, hotels, restaurants, bars, medical facilities, stores, and all other types of businesses.
- All enclosed areas on properties, including buildings or vehicles owned or controlled by the City of Nome, and including every room, chamber, place of meeting or public assembly under the control of the City of Nome.
- · All areas within 20 feet of each entrance to enclosed areas on properties owned or controlled by the City of Nome, including every room, chamber, place of meeting or public assembly under the control of the City of Nome.
- All areas within 50 feet of each entrance to a health care facility;
- All outdoor playing fields, playgrounds, and parks controlled by the City of Nome except in designated smoking areas, which may be established only in perimeter areas at least 20 feet from bleachers, grandstands, seating areas within the venue or park or playground, and concession
- All public and school bus stops, including buildings and other structures intended for shelter while waiting for transportation.
- All areas within 20 feet of each entrance to enclosed areas at an establishment licensed under state law to sell alcoholic beverages for consumption on the premises. When an establishment licensed under state law to sell alcoholic beverages for consumption on the premises includes an entrance to an outdoor area such as a patio or deck, the minimum reasonable distance shall be 10 feet.

The ordinance will take effect 120 days after adoption by the council.

Sales tax revisions postponed

An ordinance to amend the city's sales tax code was scheduled for a second reading, public hearing and final action, but the council unanimously approved a motion by Brown to postpone action indefinitely. The move was expected. Several representatives of local businesses questioned parts of the proposed ordinance on May 11 during an informal meeting with Brown and Knodel, who then conveyed their comments to other council members and City Attorney Brooks Chandler at a work session on May 18. Nome businessmen Scott Henderson and Mark Johnson participated in a twohour discussion of the proposed ordinance at the work session.

Chandler had prepared the ordinance based on revisions of the sales tax code developed by John P. Johns, a certified public accountant, under contract with the city and in consultation with the council at two work sessions. On Monday Michels said a lot more work is needed to revise the sales tax code and additional work sessions will be held with business representatives.

Other council actions

The council unanimously approved a resolution making a formal request to the Commissioner of Administration to include the city's eligible employees in the State of Alaska Group Health Care and Life Insurance Benefits Plan.

The council also unanimously approved by resolution a Nome Planning Commission recommendation to add areas to the city's General Permit from the U.S. Corps of Engineers, which will expire in July. In 2006 the city added about 54 acres to

The areas specified for inclusion in the permit are the Nome Port industrial pad; USMS 410—Arthur Place; port north expansion area; portion north of port industrial pad extending north to the Snake River, AKA USMS 1339 and AKA state trailer area; tracts A, B, C, D and E and extensions of Gold Avenue and West C, D and E Streets, AKA Sand Spit; Nome Small Boat Harbor; the area bound by the existing General Permit, Nome Bypass Road, and the shoreline, AKA southeast corner of the Nome town site and AKA East End Park; Ivanoff subdivision; Sons subdivision; and USMS 1263-Montana Fraction Placer.

The council approved a fee waiver for the Anvil City Science Academy to use Old St. Joe's Hall for an Artist in Residence Project on May 13. The value of the fee waiver is $100.

City manager's report

City Manager Josie Bahnke said the Alaska House of Representatives appropriated the following funds for Nome projects in the final days of the special legislative session.

- $14 million in the capital budget for construction of the Richard Foster Building (to house the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum and Historical Archives).
- $7 million for replacement of Norton Sound Health Corporation's long-term care facility;
- $4.5 million for improvement of the Nome-Council Road from Milepost 4 to Milepost 16.
- $950,000 for deferred maintenance for the National Guard Ar-
- $715,000 for deferred maintenance for Anvil Mountain Correctional Center: $545,838 for the elementary
- school boiler replacement; • $200,000 for a solar panel on the
- airport hangar (federal funds);

- $90,000 for the school sprinkler
- $75,000 for Nome Volunteer Fire Dept. equipment; and
- $8,000 for the Boys and Girls

"The fate of these appropriations is now in the hands of Governor Parnell to either veto or approve," Bahnke said.

Upcoming events

Brevig Mission rocks

5.2 earthquake hits region but no one carried off by "rapture"

By Sandra L. Medearis

An earthquake rocked and rumbled Brevig Mission early Saturday morning. The temblor, rated at 5.2 by the U.S. Geophysical Survey, was also felt in Nome, about 75 miles away. The pinpoint on the map showed the center of the quake on the peninsula side of Brevig Lagoon toward the west end and opposite the winter trail side of the water. No damage was apparent in the Brevig

Mission-Teller area, according to Robert Tokienna who answered the phone at the Brevig Mission Traditional Council Monday.

"It was big enough to shake the whole house," Tokienna said. "We were in the bedroom at the time. My little two-year-old son Robert was in the front room. He came and brought us into the front room and shook the table to show us what the earthquake curred at a spot on the map that was 12 miles from Brevig Mission, seven miles from Port Clarence, and 17 miles from Teller. The Palmer Tsunami Warning Center issued a "non-alert" minutes and changes had to be made that resulted in the corporation being approved for a two-year license. Smith's attorney, Lewis, said Smith had been in the "wrong place at the wrong time." Lewis said NSHC had not followed their personnel policy concerning at-will employment, that when in 2009 at the time of evaluation they said "you need to do better, the deal changed ... If you do, you're good to go...If you do, you stay, if you don't.... That's the deal that got

About 40 people filled the courtroom Monday before Lewis and Juliassen began trimming the pool with questions to weed out jury candidates based on their prior employment experiences and feelings toward NSHC. As the jury selection finished, the court dismissed and thanked employees of NSHC for their time.

Judge Ben Esch and the attorneys agreed to put six days through May 31 on the court calendar for the jury trial. The jury comprised seven women and five men, with one of each gender as alternates.

Attorneys gave opening statements after the jury was seated and began to present evidence Monday afternoon. This presentation of exhibits and testimony by both sides would be followed by closing arguments and instructions to the jury by Esch prior to deliberation of the facts and evidence. Esch emphasized that opening and closing statements were not evidence. Esch, in response to a question from one potential juror, said he would define and explain "at will" employment vs. temporary employment before jury deliberations.

One dictionary defines "employment at will" as a common-law rule that an employment contract of indefinite duration can be terminated by either the employer or the employee at any time for any reason.

Case examples show that the concept of employment at will has been set aside in some cases based on breaking the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing.

Both sides planned to call NSHC employees past and present as witnesses-Melissa Boeckmann, Marvin Poyourow, possibly NPD Officer Ian Koenig, Darlene Milligrock and Dr. Karen O'Neill for Smith, and Jay David, Melissa Boeckmann, Michael Applebee for NSRC. Boeckmann was employed until recently as NSHC vice president of community services.

Late afternoon Monday, Lewis asked Boeckmann to take the witness stand where she was asked to identify and verify a stack of papers one by one—items from Smith's personnel files, NSHC Employee Manual, and so on. The decision on the issues should be available in the next issue of the Nugget.

Council reviews NJU budget

ing at the next meeting. The budget includes estimated revenues of $13.6 million and expenses of $12.9 million, resulting in a net operating margin of $685,391. The ordinance says the cash margins will be used to fund the 2011 capital improvements budget, annual bond and debt service principal payments, fuel inventory and grant program local participation, which are not part of the operation and maintenance budget.

The council also heard first reading of an ordinance approving the 2011 capital improvements projects budget for NJUS and moved it forward for second reading and a public hearing at the next meeting. The budget totals $905,000 and includes $175,000 to replace vehicles, $280,000 to replace a vacuum truck, $180,000 to replace a loader, $50,000 to replace a dozer, and $220,000 to purchase a hydraulic excavator.

The council approved a motion by Stan Andersen to postpone action on resolutions to approve agreements between NJUS and the Alaska Public Employees Assn., the International Union of Operating Engineers Local 302 and the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 1547. Andersen said the council first needs to review the 2011 budgets for NJUS with the utility board. City Manager Josie Bahnke and Utility Manager John Handeland are to arrange a meeting between the council and the board for next week.

Handeland expressed concern about a possible rise in fuel prices in the "2011 Business Plan" he provided to the council.

'The single greatest variable in budget over which Board, management and employees have no control is the price of fuel," Handeland "Fuel cost in 2010 was slightly less than projected when [the] plan was developed, and the scenario is definitely different this year as world market prices continue to rise. Our 2011 plan has been based on a landed price of $4 a gallon, a significant increase from the 2010 actual purchase. We are hopeful this will change positively, but there have been no indications since the beginning of the year that there will be any decrease; in fact, $4 per gallon may be too low. We project to receive fuel in August and at that point will have slightly less than 700,000 gallons of fuel to average into the price, which resulted in a September-December...average price approximating $3.66.

"The plan draft does not currently include any adjustments to the fuel surcharge on electricity, continuing the existing rate of 16.98 cents, Handeland noted. "The Board will need to consider a change to the surcharge once new fuel has been procured. Based on $4 fuel—the tariff formula would result in an increase of 10.34 cents; however, with averaging remaining old inventory (and assuming an August delivery), it would be about 2.24 cents less (still an 8 cent increase)! (Some additional analysis might be in order/should be performed and consideration given to adjusting the fuel surcharge sooner-to potentially spread/reduce the increase)."

Following the council meeting, Handeland told The Nome Nugget the 2011 Business Plan needs updating because the NJUS fuel order was placed earlier than anticipated, and he will know in 15 to 20 days what price the utility will pay for fuel this Handeland told the council he is working on fuel financing and will need approval for a loan of $8 million from Wells Fargo to NJUS to purchase two million gallons of fuel at $4 per gallon.

Third Avenue sinkholes

Speaking on behalf of homeowners on Third Avenue between K and N streets, Nancy Mendenhall told the council that the problem of sinkholes has been particularly bad this spring. It's a long-term problem that has to do with ice lenses in the soil, and it's getting worse, she added. She reported that NJUS filled a 10 by 15 foot sinkhole last week on a lot next to the house she and her husband. Perry, own on the corner of Third and K, but it is sinking again.

Mendenhall said Bruce and Kathi Tweet used seven dump truck loads of fill dirt last summer and five loads the previous summer on their property, but they still have big holes under their house. The Mendenhalls and Tweets are among several owners of houses on Third Avenue between K and N streets who have written letters to the utility board and Mayor Denise Michels seeking solutions to chronic sinkhole and drainage problems.

Michels told Mendenhall the city will form an ad hoc committee to address the property owners' concerns. Councilwoman Mary Knodel said she has asked that the city engineer (Bristol Environmental Engineering) look at the sinkholes and suggest a solution. Andersen said the city already has done a couple of million dollars worth of drainage studies.

Alaska coastal management program doomed to sunset

By Diana Haecker

Some of the last items on the legislature's to-do list were bills to extend the Alaska Coastal Management program, but even though a compromise bill seemed to have sealed the deal to extend the program for another year, the House voted it down and immediately gaveled out afterwards. This left no room for further negotiations and the program died right then and there, unless the governor or the legislature calls a special session.

Governor Sean Parnell had introduced two bills, SB 45 and HB 106. both proposed a six-year extension of the program. The House bill passed, but the Senate Finance committee released a bill draft with changes that would have empowered local knowledge and local input in form of an adcouncil. One of the amendments would have limited the governor's power to only remove a coastal policy board member for cause – instead of firing the member 'at will.' The governor signaled at first he would be fine with the clause, but then at the last minute changed his mind and said that he should be able to fire council members at will.

Nome Representative Neal Foster said there was also a second point that led to the demise of the amended Senate bill. Most rural legislators supported language that would give local knowledge equal weight to scientific studies or evidence. "We were basically asking to consider the strengths of both arguments, the scientific and the local knowledge," said Foster.

Senator Donnie Olson and his colleague on the committee, Senator Bill Wielechowski said they felt that they had a good compromise and argued for a strong ACMP program that gives locals and the state meaningful input. But amendments made in conference committee failed to pass the House 20 to 15. The bill needed 21 votes to pass. Wielechowski also said that the Governor was not supporting efforts to reach a compromise.

Republicans in favor of letting the ACMP sunset voluntarily handed over control to the feds.

Rep. Foster expressed that he was astonished that the same legislators who are critical of the heavy hand of federal government in Alaskan affairs have voted to not extend the program. "We all don't know how to make sense of that," said Wielechowski. "The only way to keep Alaska at the

"We will be the only state in the nation that doesn't have a coastal management program, which is crazy because we have more coast line than the lower 48 combined."

- Senator Bill Wielechowski

Nome Representative Neal Foster and Senator Donnie Olson, along with Kotzebue Rep. Reggie Joule were in strong support to keep the program. Nome ACMP coordinator Jim Dory said that he is not clear about the raminifications when the program sunsets but that it might affect mining permits. Now the ACMP coordinates mining permits, but if the program goes away, miners would not enjoy the one-stop shop of getting their multi-agency permitting done, but would have to take their permits to the various different agencies.

The Republican-controlled House aligned with the Governor and despite the often heard rhetoric of fighting federal overreach, the table would be to call us into special session. Once the program dies, it's hard to bring it back," the Anchorage Democrat said. He also added if the program is allowed to sunset and bring it back at a later point, the state would lose the institutional knowledge by those state employees who have worked with the program for its 32-year history in Alaska. "We will be the only state in the nation that doesn't have a coastal management program which is crazy because we have more coast line than the lower 48 combined," said Wielechowski.

As of press time, there has not been any signal from the Governor to call another special session to tackle the Alaska Coastal Management program again. If no action is taken, the program will sunset on June 30.

Talk among various legislators is that the House leadership is talking to Senate leadership about calling a special session. It would take two thirds of each chamber to call themselves into a special session – if the Governor doesn't do it. But as of press time, there are no indications that Governor Parnell would be inclined to call in a special session over the extension of the ACMP.

In a speech before the Alaska Miners Association in Juneau, Parnell openly chastised Senators who fought for keeping the program with beefed up local input. According to The Juneau Empire, Parnell said he was being "snaked" and "bitten in the process" because his political opponents didn't negotiate fairly. Parnell said that the program's demise is the Senate's fault, which didn't adopt the version that Parnell together with industry and House Representatives crafted.

Senator Wielechowski said the demise of the program is a lose-lose situation. "I think it hurts everyone," Wielechowski said. It would take away the State's ability to have a say in OCS oil and gas leases, takes away federal funds and is even bad for the industry as project developers now lose the streamlined permitting process. "It just results in less coordinated and less reasoned decisions," Wielechowski said. He added that the federal coastal management zone program also ties federal revenue share with states to the federal approved state coastal management plan. If the program is going away, so does the revenue share money from offshore gas and oil developments.

Tasked with finding out what the consequences would be if the ACMP were to end, a legislative research report concludes that it would mean the loss of the state's ability to review and influence federal activities in Alaska, the loss of coordinated permitting process and the loss of federal funds and approximately 30 state jobs.

Congress passed the Coastal Zone Management in 1972 with the intent to help coastal states to manage the nation's coastal resources. While the participation in the program is voluntary all 35 eligible states chose to participate and develop a federally approved coastal management plan. Alaska's plan was approved in 1979. The intent was to provide coordination and cooperation between state and federal agencies. The important feature of the program was the so called "consistency review process" that examined whether or not a project is consistent with the state's coastal zone policies. The legislative report said that the most significant consequence to the ACMP's sunset would "be the loss of Alaska's ability to review and to object to federal activities, licenses and permits through the consistency review process.'

The ACMP gives the state a formal presence in the review of projects, including those on the outer continental shelf. While the state can still submit comments, the projects now don't have to comply with state and the district's enforceable policies. The state also would no longer receive $2.5 million to fund the coastal zone management program.

Corner Office

What does it take to lead?

By Jason Evans

In my experience working with leaders throughout Alaska, including Presidents and CEOs, executive directors, board members, and business owners I see many traits that make them good leaders. Over a five part series, I will highlight these traits and leaders in this column over the next several weeks.

Trait number one: curiosity. Leaders by nature and by training become very curious people. They always want to know your story and love to share theirs. Leaders have relentless questions. When I work with a good leader I know it because as soon as I am done talking I always get 20 questions. Why do things work the way they do? What is the history of that? Why do people use this for that? Why is it that way? Is there another way to get it done? How do we prevent that? And on and on it goes.

Most people feel a leader has all the answers already and in fact believe that is why they are paid; to give answers to problems. Good leaders can make a fast decision but they know asking important questions and getting different perspectives will allow them to make better decisions. They know the collection of answers will lead them into making the better decisions.

A board member from Arctic Slope Regional Corporation highlighted one of their executives to me by saying; he always asks the right questions. "I sit on the board and sometimes I don't understand an issue but I feel uncomfortable asking a question and all of a sudden our executive will ask the right question. This allows all of us to hear the answer and makes me feel comfortable to then ask a follow-up question if I need."

"One of the most important parts of my job is to take complex information and understand it as quickly as possible. I gain this understanding by asking questions that get to the heart of the problem. This allows me to make the right decisions," says

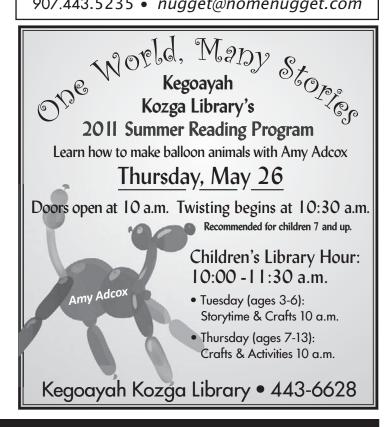

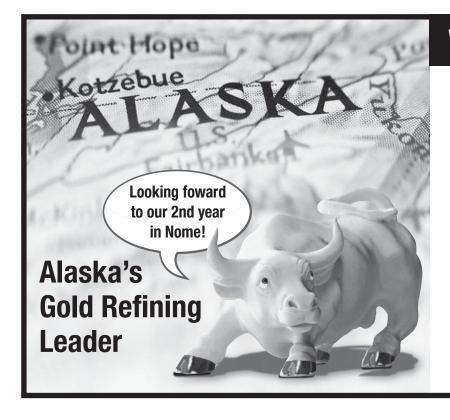

Ana Hoffman, president and CEO of Bethel Native Corporation. Ana is one of these great leaders, growing Bethel Native Corporation from a small local company based in Bethel, to a national company with revenues approaching $100 million.

I was asked once, why do I ask the questions I ask? My answer: the answers bring more questions and more understanding. It's this understanding that uncovers opportunities. It's this understanding that finds the strengths and weaknesses in an organization. It's this understanding that only comes from asking questions and from being curious. We need curious leaders in our organizations.

Regional entities team to 'grow our own' nurses

By Tyler Rhodes NSEDC Communications Director

Had it not been for a new degree program in Nome, there is a good chance Jackie Ivanoff would not be on her way to becoming a nurse—let alone one who would be working in the Norton Sound region.

Originally from Unalakleet, Ivanoff had planned on attending nursing school in Anchorage. Had her plan worked out, she said she would have likely stayed in Alaska's largest city once she got her degree. But with heavy competition for the available spots in the Anchorage nursing program, Ivanoff said she faced a good possibility of ending up on a long waiting list and, as a result, a different career track. "If I couldn't have gotten into nursing school [in Anchorage], I probably would have changed majors," she said.

The development of a two-year associate's degree program in nursing at the UAF Northwest Campus in Nome has meant Ivanoff and three classmates can get the education and training they need close to home. For the region, it means in a couple of years

Nome's new hospital should gain four new nurses who know the region, understand its culture and, most important, will likely stick around.

This is exactly what the Bering Strait Health Consortium set out to do when it started working to establish a nursing degree program in Nome more than three years ago. In what has been almost a perfect storm of partnership, the effort to "grow our own" nurses has been spearheaded by the consortium made up of Norton Sound Health Corp., Kawerak, UAF Northwest Campus, the Nome Job Center, NACTEC, Nome Eskimo Community and the Interior Area Health Education Consortium.

While the roster of participants in the consortium already seems long, the list does not end there. The Bering Strait Health Consortium represents the organizational and logistical arm of the effort, while another set of organizations have come through to deliver critical funding. Led by Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation's initial $100,000 contribution, other donors kicked in another $9,000 for the program's first year. Additional contributors include Sitnasuak Native Corp., Wells Fargo, Pioneer Igloo No. 1 and the Pioneer Igloo No. 1 Women's Auxiliary.

NSEDC has since given another $40,000 to the program, and Sitnasuak representatives attended a May 17 open house at the UAF Northwest Campus with an $11,000 check in hand. "I think the NSEDC board recognized that development of a regional or local workforce of professional health care providers is an important element both of an economic and social benefit to our region," said NSEDC Board Chairman Dan Harrelson. "Finding and retaining nurses and other medical staff has been a challenge in our region for years. Having local people trained and employed only makes sense. Bottom line— it is good for our region and our communities."

Prospective nurses know the benefits of being close to home

Fresh off a successful first semester, prospective nurses Ivanoff, Amber Ryan, Sarah Weaver and Jessica Mute stood at the head of a packed classroom at the UAF Northwest Campus May 17. The open house served as an occasion to celebrate the program's progress and thank its organizers and donors. The standing-room-only crowd bore testament to just how many people and organizations have worked toward getting the program and students to where they are today.

These students who have benefitted from the wide support put behind the program know that their success will, in turn, benefit the region. "The best part is we can have nurses from the region," Weaver said. "You're from here, you know the culture." Weaver said that local knowledge and sensibility will allow her and her fellow nursing students to deliver better care.

Both Ivanoff and Ryan are originally from Unalakleet. Weaver and Mute have lived in Nome for several years. "It's been really nice to do it here because my family lives in Unalakleet. It's nice to be close to home," Ivanoff said.

Part of the deal in joining the program is agreeing to work for Norton Sound Health Corp. once the nurses have finished. The woman who will oversee the new nurses when they come aboard, NSHC Director of Nursing Administration Cecilia Watson, sees tremendous value in cultivating regional residents into health care providers. "It will be a benefit for patients having familiar faces and people who understand where you're coming from," she said.

The nursing students have already had a taste of working at the hospital through clinical rotations. Most of the study so far has occurred at the UAF Northwest Campus with instructor Bridgett Watkins R.N., whose time has been contributed by NSHC. The Northwest Campus classroom is outfitted with high-tech training mannequins that can simulate all kinds of symptoms and illnesses, allowing the students to practice on a lifelike figure before having to test their skills on real patients.

While hosted at the University of Alaska Fairbanks Northwest Campus in Nome, the program is actually an outreach site of the University of Alaska Anchorage's School of Nursing. At the May 17 festivities Northwest Campus Director Lee Haugen said when it came to hosting the nursing classes, it did not matter whether the program belonged to UAF or UAA. What is important, Haugen said, is supporting an educational effort that benefits both the students and the region.

Round two is coming up

The next nursing cohort to be trained in Nome will start in 2013. Although that seems like a ways out still, prospective nursing students need to have a number of prerequisite classes completed before starting the program. More information is available by contacting the Northwest Campus at 1-800-478-2202.

Nome Beltz students off on right foot, thanks to local partnership!

Through a first time partnership between UAF-Northwest Campus, Nome-Beltz High School and Nome Eskimo Community, seven students were provided an opportunity to enroll into an approved dual-credit math course this spring semester with Northwest Campus.

Northwest Campus waived onethird of the tuition costs for high school students enrolled in the course. Nome Eskimo Community provided scholarship funds for another one-third of the course costs. Nome-Beltz agreed to reimburse the students the remaining one-third of costs if they successfully completed

NWC instructor Mike Rutledge taught the intermediate algebra course online through the Elluminate Live program. All students successfully completed the course and are one step closer to completing their college math requirements.

"Northwest Campus thanks Nome Eskimo Community and Nome-Beltz High School for the financial and academic support of our high school students," said Kacey Miller, student services manager for NWC. "Congratulations to all the students on the successful completion of this college course. We wish them the best of luck in all their future endeavors!"

NBHS Class of 2011 graduates

By Lori Head

A poster behind the stage stated "We're so good we're #1 twice -2011 NBHS," as 30 students received high school diplomas and became Nome's newest batch of alumni.

With family and friends from near and far, co-valedictorians Jeremiah Johnson and Norman Tweet, co-salutatorians Alex Morgan and Tim Sullivan and Nome Extensions valedictorian Sam Schmidt properly thanked and advised the crowd with speeches. The graduating class selected LieuDell Goldsberry, a former Nome Public School PE teacher, as their commencement speaker. Goldsberry, remembering the feeling of homesickness himself, encouraged the students with advice he would receive from his father when he would call home and hear, "Give it another week." The choir sang, the high school band played, and there was Eskimo dancing as well.

And in true, traditional and generous Nome form, the scholarships were presented. At the three hour commencement program approximately $193,000 was handed out, including the new Alaska Performance Scholarship from the state. These graduates will have a tough time competing with that hourly rate for quite some time.

Science Academy hosts Artists in Schools

The Anvil City Science Academy in Nome has spent the last two weeks focusing on the arts. This is the fourth consecutive year that ACSA students have participated in the Artists in Schools program funded by the Alaska State Council on the Arts. The grant this year, written by Margaret Thomas, provided for the ACSA students to participate in a two-week portion of the school year devoted to the study of art. This year, artists were selected from local talent

Students chose two art sectionals. Lorlie Shield taught beading, Karen Olanna taught carving and block printing, Sarah Hanson Hofstetter taught guitar and song writing, Lisa Leeper taught mural paining, Tara Connolly-Prosser, Kathy Crayon and Todd Hindman taught pottery on a wheel, and Teresa Gartung taught world drumming.

Students alternated between their two sectionals. The culmination of the program was a gallery night to display and perform the art forms. The program took place on Friday night, May 13 at Old St. Joseph Hall in Nome.

ACSA students expressed gratitude to the teachers and the grant writer, along with all those who helped provide them with the opportunity to study art. Daniel Head, an eighth grade student at ACSA provided the following paragraph:

For the last three years Anvil City Science Academy has been pleased to welcome artists from around the state into their school. This year they pulled from their very own community and came up with three different artists to teach their students various art forms including drumming, beading, guitar, ceramics, mural painting, and block printing. The students were allowed to pick two activities they switched between daily. When asked what she thought about the artist in residence program, eighth grader Alexis Hutson answered, "The artist in residence program really opened me up to a lot of different types of arts." fifth grade student Audrey Lawrence was asked what she thought about drumming, she answered, "Drumming has helped me see a whole new spectrum of possibilities." seventh grader Katy Tomter was asked about beading, she responded, "Beading is a wonderful class that helped me to reconnect continued on page 13

BBB warns scams proliferate after bin Laden's death

In the days following the death of Osama bin Laden, Better Business Bureau is warning consumers to watch out for a slew of cyberscams that have popped up.

According to Kaspersky Labs, an Internet security firm, malicious websites and links have been proliferating on Google Images searches, Facebook and other social media sites.

Facebook: A fake video claiming to show the death of bin Laden prompts users to input a malicious URL into their browsers, which could infect computers with viruses. Kaspersky also reports that other Facebook scams lure victims to malicious Facebook pages with promises of free airplane tickets or other "free" offers to "celebrate Osama's death."

Phishing: Scams similar to the Nigerian letter scam are circling around bin Laden's death. Although each letter contains a slightly different appeal, BBB is reporting the latest letter claims a "soldier" is asking for assistance transferring millions to a trustworthy U.S. citizen. Usually, victims are asked to provide their bank account numbers and their bank's name, address, phone and fax numbers. Using the provided information, con artists can plunder bank accounts. In other examples, cons try to get money directly by requesting exorbitant payments to cover transfer fees, travel, taxes, or necessary bribes before the transaction can occur. Participants do not receive the promised funds, and losses from illegal foreign business deals are nearly impossible to recover.

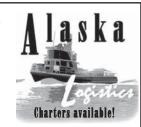

BBB serving Alaska, Oregon and Western Washington offers scam avoidance tips:

- Think before clicking. Be mindful of links claiming details not available from news sources. In the case of bin Laden, no photos or videos related to his death have been released. Be skeptical of links saying otherwise.
- Don't fall for a not-so-free offer. Often, all it takes for a virus to infect a computer is clicking one bad link.
- Spread the word. Young people are computer savvy, but may not be scam savvy. Discuss online schemes with the family.
- Know the red flags. Emails or websites with poor grammar or misspelled words are red flags of a scam. Never wire money to an unknown party.

Consumers can find more scam prevention information at bbb.org.

Diet changes can prevent kidney stones

Stone formation in the kidney, called nephrolithiasis, can lead to one of the most painful clinical conditions known to anyone: passing a

Preventing stones from forming is a priority for anyone with a history of kidney stones or people with a family history of the condition.

There are basically five different types of kidney stones. Each type is made up of minerals excreted in excess by the kidneys. When these minerals become concentrated in the urine, small crystals begin to form that grow into small stones as the crystals pass through the kidney, similar to the way wet snow forms an increasingly larger snowball as it is rolled across more snow.

The most common stones are made of calcium and oxalate. Others are made of uric acid crystals, phosphate, or rarely cystine.

Doctors often analyze kidney stones to determine specifically what they are made of. Identifying the type of kidney stone can be very helpful to people who have had more than one attack.

Regardless of the type of stone, certain steps can be taken by anyone to decrease the risk of stone forma-

- Drink plenty of water. This is the single most important way to prevent all types of stone formation. Experts recommend drinking enough fluid to produce 2 liters of clear urine each day.
- Eat more citrus fruits like oranges, lemons, or limes. These fruits contain a compound called citrate that prevents stone formation. Grapefruit can cause stone formation and is considered an exception to this rule.
- Avoid dark sodas (pop). Dark sodas increase the risk of calcium oxalate stones.
- Drink coffee and tea in moderation. This will increase overall fluid intake and may help lower the risk of
- Maintain a healthy weight. People with a BMI above 30 are much more likely to form stones.
- Reduce meats, but increase vegetable protein in the diet. Animal protein, including red meat, fish, and eggs contain purines, which increase the risk of forming uric acid stones.
- Take calcium supplements with food. Calcium in the diet binds to oxalate in the intestines. This effectively traps oxalate, the most common cause of kidney stones, before it enters the blood stream.

Anyone who develops a kidney stone should seek a medical evaluation to identify the size, location, and most likely cause of the stone formation. Many stones can be passed with the help of medication, though some require surgical intervention

Lorena "Tiny" Carpenter

Lorena "Tiny" Ann Amonina (Mogg) Carpenter died peacefully in her home on Mother's Day, May 08, surrounded by her family. She was born in Nome on November 30, 1941 to Sammy and Mary Mogg. Tiny grew up in Nome with her two brothers and four sisters, Boozany, Midge, Jeannie, Mary Jane, Tom, and Nancy. Growing up she was involved in many activities such as cheerleading, dances and Civil Air Patrol. She graduated from Nome High School in 1961. Folks could always find Tiny helping her mother around the house and in the kitchen where she gained her incredible cooking skills.

In 1961 Tiny met her soul mate, Jack Carpenter and on April 6, 1963 they married. They were blessed with four beautiful princesses, Christine, Gigi, Marlene and Tiffany. Tiny embraced the challenge of raising her high maintenance daughters, though if they were asked, they were perfect angels. The Carpenters moved numerous times between Barrow, Nome, Kotzebue, Fairbanks and Anchorage, but finally moved back home to Nome in 1979.

Tiny's first love was her family and second was her credit card (just ask Jack) but nothing brought her more joy than her 12 grandkids Brittney, Jasen, Megan, Jeremy, Rebecca, Garret, Bailey, Sydney, Kelsey, Ellie, Joseph, and Avery. Tiny always tried to be there for her grandkids, whether it was their birthday, graduation, or for holidays and always made sure her family had a huge Christmas.

Jack and Tiny were active members in Lions Club and enjoyed dancing and visiting with friends. They loved camping in their trailer on the sandbar at the Pilgrim River, big bon fires, fishing and especially traveling to their favorite vacation spots in Nevada and Arizona. Tiny could never turn down a good game of video poker or a pull at a slot machine.

Tiny worked as a ticket agent for many years and she truly cherished it because of her love for people, travel and ability to keep in touch Sea Ice Golf Classic. She visited often and loved to catch up with family and friends when she was in town.

Always there to support her family and friends, she would never hesitate to lend a helping hand when needed or to celebrate. Tiny was the life of every party and a blessing to anyone she came across in her journey of life. One knew they were loved if they did something wrong then got the scolding of a lifetime, followed by a great big hug.

Tiny was a collector of many things and took great pride in her collections. Her dining room displayed spoons from all over. Her house was full of Hummel figurines and every Christmas she displayed over 200 Santas of different sizes. Tiny's prize collection included items from Wein such as playing cards, coffee mugs, her ticket agent uniform, pilots wings, hats, ticket stubs, silverware, flight manifests and schedules, baggage tags, canvas bags, a trashcan lid and artwork.

Tiny will be remembered for her generosity, being a great wife, mother, sister, friend, keeping Jack in line, sticking up for her family, cooking and baking and being the best Aukie in the world.

Tiny is survived by her husband Jack, her daughters Gigi and husband David, Marlene and husband Lucas and Tiffany and husband Adam, her son-in-law Nate, 12 loving grandchildren, sisters Midge, Jeannie, Mary Jane, and Nancy and husband Bruce.

Tiny was preceded in death by her parents, Sammy and Mary Mogg, her brothers Boozany and Tom Mogg, and her daughter, Christine Carpenter Perkins.

Saying it Sincerely

"You Can Overcome the Enemy!"
By Pastor Mike Christian
(River of Life Assembly of God)
Member of Nome Ministerial Association

"I write to you, fathers, because you have known Him who is from the beginning.

I write to you, young men, because you have overcome the evil one."

I John 2:1

I once heard a friend say, "God's grace works for those who are overcome – but the promises of God are for those who are overcomers."

If you want to be an "overcomer," study the Bible until you know the promises of God. Then when the enemy comes, you'll be able to defend yourself against his attacks.

Here are a few wonderful overcoming promises:

"No weapon formed against thee shall prosper" (Isaiah 54:17)

"(I have) never seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread" (Psalm 37:25)

"Delight thyself in the Lord; and He shall give thee the desires of thine heart" (Psalm 37:4)

"Greater is He that is in you than he that is in the world" (I John 4:4) If these promises feel dead to your soul, there is a way you can bring them to life: Enter into a spirit of Worship and Praise!

This is the secret to maintaining a close and intimate walk with the Lord, even through times of difficulty. Whenever you are burdened with cares that become so heavy that you feel like you just can't handle it for another day, take a moment to call upon these promises from the Lord. Take time to lift your heart, your hands, and your voice towards Heaven and begin to Praise the Lord!

Suddenly, like a mighty jolt of electricity, the Holy Spirit will make the invisible visible and the impossible, possible. You will become alive in God once again!

The promises are given to God's people to help us all become "Overcomers in this life." Regardless of how you feel, seize the opportunity that lies before you each day, to claim the promises of God for your life. You can live the life of an "Overcomer" if you choose to reach out and live the way the Lord has intended for you to live.

Remember: God's grace is for those who are overcome; his promises are for the overcomers!

State of Alaska Department of Natural Resources Division of Mining, Land and Water Public Notice Under AS 38.05.945 Final Finding and Decision:
West Nome Beach Public Mining Area
ADL 231171

In accordance with AS 38.05.035 (a) and (e) the Department of Natural Resources, Division of Mining, Land and Water has written the Final Finding and Decision to create the West Nome Beach Public Mining Area. The West Nome Beach Pub-lic Mining Area will extend from 500' west of the mean high water line on the west side of the Nome Causeway to the west boundary of ATS 1267, a distance of approximately 10,450 feet, or 1.98 miles. It will extend seaward from mean high tide for a distance of 1/4 mile, or 1,320 feet. Mineral Order (MO) 1094 closed the proposed public principal area to new mineral enter in 2009. How mining area to new mineral entry in 2009. How ever, existing mineral rights are not affected. The West Nome Beach Public Mining Area will cover approximately 320 acres of tide and submerged land, less approximately 35 acres of existing mineral rights at the east end of the public mining

Due to management concerns arising from the in-creased demand for public mining areas offshore of Nome and problems that occurred during the 2010 offshore mining season, there will be new permitting requirements and permit stipulations for permitting requirements and permit supulations for miners in both public mining areas. An Annual Placer Mining Application (APMA) and Miscella-neous Land Use Permit (MLUP) will be required for all sizes of dredges in both public mining areas. This requirement will allow the DNR to revoke permits for miners who do not follow the stip ulations for operating in the public mining areas Generally, the permit stipulations will apply in both public mining areas at Nome. The stipulations are

1. In the West Nome Beach Public Mining Area nozzles with no more than 18 hp pump engines. This limitation is to maintain the small/recreational mining character of the public mining area, and to extend the life of the resource in the new area. 2. Eight-ingo Nozzles with 36 hp programs will be allowed in the East Nome Beach Public Mining Area.

3. Miners may not leave any type of marker to secure a location for their exclusive mining on future days. The miner only occupies a location while their dredge is on that location and in operation. Miners will not be allowed to leave their unoccupied dredges on site in order to preserve a loca

4. Miners must maintain a minimum 75' distance between dredges. The first miner on site estab-lishes their position; miners arriving later must lo-cate with no part of their operation, dredge, anchors, or divers, less than 75' from the first anchors, or divers, less than 75 from the first miner's dredge.

5. State tide and submerged land begins and ex-tends seawards of the mean high tide level. Since the average tide range at Nome is 1.04 feet, this means that in order to be on state land the miner must effectively be in the water. All of the uplands at Nome are privately owned. Therefore, high-bankers can be used in the surf below mean high tide, but not higher up on the beach.

6. Because the uplands are all privately owned, any miner mining or camping on the beach or tun-dra above the beach will be in trespass unless they have permission from the land owner. Trespass is not allowed, and is grounds for revocation of the miner's permit.

7. Permits can be revoked for failure to follow stipulations or for any actions that impede another miner's ability to mine, or cause a threat to safety. 8. Permits can be revoked or denied for failure to file the appropriate Mining License Tax and Production Royalty returns.

9. Miners operating in either of the public mining areas will confine their operations to those public ......rg areas. will not mine outside of the public mining area without an operator authorization from the adjacent lease holder and approved by the DMLW. mining areas. Miners will not mine outside of the 10. No individual, association of individuals, or company may hold an interest in the operation of more than one suction dredge in the two public mining areas combined. The dredge may have only one hose and nozzle. The intent of this stipcontinued on page 18

Kawerak requests low hardcap on chum bycatch in pollock fishery

By Laurie McNicholas

The North Pacific Fishery Management Council will take public testimony on alternative ways to minimize the bycatch of chum salmon in the Bering Sea pollock fishery during a meeting scheduled June 8-14 at the Nome Recreation Center. The council has allocated 20 hours for initial review of a chum salmon bycatch analysis beginning Friday, June 10. The NPFMC and National Marine Fisheries Service together manage fisheries in federal waters from three to 200 miles off Alaska. The council makes recommendations to NMFS, which approves, implements and enforces

The Bering Sea pollock fishery produces roe (eggs), surimi and fillet products. The total value of pollock was estimated at $1.33 billion in 2008 and $1.030 billion in 2009. Salmon are prohibited species in the pollock fishery, but vessels towing large trawl nets incidentally catch salmon along with pollock. By law, bycatch is counted but cannot be sold. Most of the chum salmon taken as incidental catches in the large trawl nets used by pollock vessels are dead when they are brought on board and are returned to the sea.

Chum salmon bycatch in the fishery reached extremely high levels in

City Council mulls budget cuts, property tax increase

By Laurie McNicholas

What's this about a 16.72 mill property tax rate?

That's what it will take to balance the city's FY12 budget unless expenses are cut, City Controller Cussy Kauer told the Nome Common Council at a work session on May 27. She indicated the FY11 budget will end the year with a deficit, and she said the 7 mill rate property tax rate on which the budget is based is artificially low.

Will the council consider raising the property tax to 16.72 mills in FY12?

"Absolutely not," said Councilwoman Mary Knodel. She said she had just received the draft FY12 budget from Kauer and has not had time to read it.

Councilman Stan Andersen was baffled by the draft FY12 budget before Kauer told him it is based on a 16.72 mill property tax rate. He asked Kauer to project actual revenues and expenses for FY11 through the end of the fiscal year so he will know the amount of the aticipated deficit. She said to do that she will need time to examine the budget carefully.

Kauer spent about two hours re-

NSHC / Smith trial ends: Jury dismissed No money awarded

By Sandra L. Medearis

A court action by Greg Smith against Norton Sound Health Corp. expected to last through Tuesday ended at mid-day Friday, sooner than expected. Judge Ben Esch had set aside six days from May 23 through May 31 on the court calendar for the jury trial.

Smith took his former employer to court after he was fired last year from the substance abuse treatment section of Behavior Health Services.

The outcome? No money for Smith. He was an "at-will" employee. NSHC needed no reason, good, bad, or indifferent to fire him,

Judge Ben Esch ruled. At-will status was not altered by any discussion and process of improvements following an unfavorable job evaluation that Smith said implied a contract differing from "at-will."

Last week a jury trial looked at Smith's claim of wrongful termination. The jury heard witnesses and attorneys pore over more than 20 documents in detail, for four-and-ahalf days from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. As the jury came upstairs from lunch Friday and waited outside the court chamber, Norton Sound's attorney, James H. Juliussen, entered a motion asking the court to direct a verdict toward his client, saying that Smith had been an "at-will" employee under terms of the Norton Sound employee manual, as are all employees at NSHC, unless they have a contract signed by the CEO, i.e., no evidence had changed this fact: An at-will employee may be fired at any time without cause. Judge Ben Esch agreed, denying Smith compensation for work lost or punitive damages against NSHC.

During the proceedings, an accountant testified that by her analysis, Smith, by losing his job at

Dear Editor.

Congratulations to Nome for joining over 450 cities around the United States that enjoy protection from secondhand smoke in all workplaces!

On behalf of the Alaska Tobacco Control Alliance, we would like to personally thank Mayor Denise Michels and the Nome Common Council for protecting public health in Nome. Again, congratulations on establishing Nome as a leader among Alaskan communities, and as a city that considers the health of its citizens to be of utmost importance. Dear Editor.

The debate over how to best address chum salmon being caught in the Bering Sea commercial pollock fishery will be coming to the region next week when the North Pacific Fishery Management Council meets for several days in Nome.

While here, the council (NPFMC) will be deliberating and taking testimony on proposed actions to reduce the number of chum being taken as bycatch. "Bycatch" is the term given to fish that are not targeted in a specific fishery, but are brought in along with the intended catch.

With the debate over chum bycatch in the forefront, Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation's Board of Directors realize they are in a unique position in regard to the issue. As an organization that serves its member communities, NSEDC recognizes the importance of- and works to improve-local fish stocks for both commercial and subsistence uses. On the other hand, as a participant in the Community Development Quota program, NSEDC derives much of its capital through the Bering Sea pollock fishery, reinvesting the funds in the region through economic support, scholarships, development of local fisheries and the creation of beneficial programs.

After reviewing the suite of alternatives and the myriad and complex variations on how those options could be implemented, NSEDC's board decided at a special meeting May 23 in Anchorage that it needed

Summer Starts with Remembrance

It was hard to believe we were in Nome this past Memorial Day weekend. The thermometer on the Bering Straits Office Building read 83°F and caused a double drive-by for some of us who could not quite believe it. However, the thermometer apparently died of heat stroke the next day.

The warm weather was a welcome relief after a long cold winter. Nomeites were picnicking, basking on the beach, roaming the countryside and taking part in the freedoms we are so lucky to enjoy. It is altogether fitting to reflect on the men and women who sacrificed their lives for this nation and served in the armed forces in both war and

It is good to know we have fellow Americans who are willing to put their lives on the line for us. Can we imagine how great it would be if we could eliminate war and not put our young men and women's lives on the line? We can hope that day will come soon as we honor those who served and made the supreme sacrifice to give us the freedoms we enjoy today. — N.L.M.-

for any one alternative. The board members, however, were resolute in one aspect-they want to see a rule change that implements real and meaningful conservation measures.

To that end, the board signaled its interest in seeing an analysis that examined the effect of combining two of the proposed options, specifically those known as "triggered area closures" and "hard caps." As a starting point, the board wished to consider the combined options at their lowest thresholds, meaning a bycatch of 25,000 chum would spur the triggered area closures, and a total bycatch of 50,000 chum would act as a ceiling, requiring pollock fishing to stop completely if that number were

To better understand how such a combination of these options would work, it is necessary to get a general idea of what each entails. The notion of a hard cap is relatively straightforward. Consider it a line in the sand; once the predetermined number of chum have been caught as bycatch (options range from 50,000 to 353,000) the pollock fishery is closed for the year.

The triggered closure option is a bit more nuanced. This alternative would shut down certain areas to pollock fishing once a predetermined number of chum salmon (options range from 25,000 to 200,000) are taken as bycatch. The areas to be closed would be those where chum bycatch has historically occurred at the highest rates. Pollock fishing would continue, but it would have to occur outside the closed areas.

The triggered closure option has variations that could either close the areas for the entire season once the cap is hit, or the cap could be divided over several months. With the monthly option, the areas would close once a certain percentage of the cap is hit, and then reopen at the start of the next month. The board expressed its interest in a monthly option (known as 2a) that would be most restrictive in June and July, the time when chum bound for the region are most present in the pollock fishing grounds.

A combination of the two alternatives would require the pollock fleet to work under lower bycatch limits when Western Alaska chum are more likely to be taken while also providing an upper limit on chum salmon

While the NSEDC board has not given a clear endorsement to any of the alternatives at this time, they do want to participate in the discussion. At this point, NSEDC has maintained flexibility to work with the various options.

The NPFMC may signal its preferred alternative or alternatives at the Nome meeting. The council will not make a final determination on new rules until its October meeting in Dutch Harbor or its December meeting in Anchorage. A voluminous amount of information on both the proposed alternatives for reducing chum salmon bycatch and the upcoming meeting in Nome can be found at the NPFMC website at www.fakr.noaa.gov/npfmc.

Dear Editor.

In 2005, the industrial trawlers killed and wasted 700,000 chum salmon as bycatch.

The North Pacific Fishery Management Council will begin meeting in Nome Monday. The council will be considering how to limit chum salmon bycatch in the Bering Sea and Aleutian Islands pollock trawl

The Nome area has been hit hardest by declining salmon returns. We haven't had commercial salmon fishing since 1989 and have the most resubsistence strictive regulations in Alaska. Salmon shortages negatively impact our economy and quality of life.

In too many years, local streams haven't gotten enough fish onto the spawning grounds to preserve the Trawl bycatch contributes to the shortages of salmon in western Alaska, and reducing bycatch will allow more fish to return to western Alaska streams for sustained yield and reduced resource waste.

Over the years, in many places around the globe, it has been discovered the hard way that after salmon numbers decline, recovery to former productivity levels can be incredibly difficult, costly and time consuming. We need to start doing something about it now, and one of the best things we can do is limit pollock trawl bycatch. High numbers of salmon from mixed stocks, killed and wasted as bycatch contribute nothing to the national or local economies, is wasteful of salmon resources and is inefficient fisheries management.

By meeting in Nome, the council has provided Norton Sound residents an unprecedented opportunity to be heard on this important issue. The costs of attending meetings and testifying before the council at their usual meeting locations are beyond the means of most rural Alaskans. The council plans to consider final action on limiting chum salmon bycatch in Unalaska a.k.a. Dutch Harbor in October. Alaska Airlines charges $1,298 for a round trip from Nome to Dutch Harbor.

I hope we will have a good turnout of local salmon users prepared to tell the council how salmon shortages have hurt the economy and quality of life for residents of this area and asking them to limit the wasteful killing of chum salmon as bycatch to the lowest number possible.

Meeting Date: June 6-14

Kotzebue airport improvements to start end of June

The main runway at Kotzebue Airport is slated for construction and will see an extension of the runway safety area. Currently the runway is 5,900 feet long with 200 yards on each end of the runway. The FAA recommends a 1,000 foot long runway safety area at each end of the runway, but the ocean limits expansion to the west, and a hillside that rises just beyond the lagoon limits expansion to the east. The Department of Transportation contracted with USKH Inc. to design engineering and environmental studies. In addition they designed the project to include pavement rehabilitation for the main runway and taxiways; replacing runway lighting systems and adjusting the navigational aids.

KNIK Construction Company is the contractor. Construction is slated to begin June 30 and end September 30, 2014.

Gambell and Savoonga get federal grants to conserve walrus

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service will give three Alaska tribes $600,000 in tribal wildlife grants. In Gambell and Savoonga, the funds will support the tribal enforcement of local marine mammal ordinances. The Native Village of Gambell and Native Village of Savoonga will work with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to conserve and monitor marine mammal resources, conduct community education efforts to benefit walrus, enhance walrus research and monitoring, and ultimately help conserve walrus through more effective local management.

Newtok received a grant to develop a conservation plan designed to protect, enhance, and restore Nelson Island's wildlife and habitat in perpetuity.

BOEMRE names Alaska director

The Bureau of Ocean Energy Management, Regulation and Enforcement director Michael Bromwich named Dr. James Kendall as the director of the Alaska Outer Continental Shelf Region. Kendall has worked as the acting director for the region since January 1, 2011 and served as the chief of BOEMRE's environmental division, where he was responsible for overseeing the bureau's $30 million environmental and socioeconomic research program. Before the year 2000, Kendall was the chief of the environmental sciences section of BOEMRE's Gulf of Mexico region.

BOEMRE's Alaska Region oversees the exploration and development of oil and gas in federal waters offshore Alaska. This includes assessments of the oil and gas resources, preparation of environmental analyses and research, coordination with local, state, tribal and federal governments, and others interested in the OCS program.

Plane crash kills family in Birchwood

A plane crash in Birchwood, a few miles north of Anchorage, claimed five lives last week. The pilot, 46year-old Lonn Greiner, his mother, 69-year-old Carolyn Greiner, and his three children, 13-year-old Glory, 11year-old Nathan, and 10-year-old Grace were killed in the crash. They were all from Eagle River.

Their plane, a Cessna 180 had taken off from the Birchwood Airport and was headed to Seldovia for an overnight trip when it crashed shortly after take-off. The plane crashed north of the runway, landed on the railroad tracks and was immediately engulfed in flames. The NTSB is investigating the cause of the crash.

Memorial weekend sees four deaths in Alaska

Alaska State Troopers and other law officers report several deaths around the state on the Memorial Day weekend. Anchorage police report that a four-year-old girl was killed on Friday night at 9 p.m. when running onto Spenard Road and was struck by a Toyota 4-Runner. The mother of the child then carried her to a nearby residence and called police. The child, 4-year-old Brenda Attahii, was taken to a local hospital where she died a short time later from her injuries. The driver of the vehicle was identified as 25-year-old Alexis Fernandez. The major collision investigative unit was called out to investigate the collision and the investigation is continuing.

State Troopers say a drunken 30year-old Fairbanks man fell from his canoe and drowned Saturday night. A dive team found the body of Ryan Stratton in a pond north of Fairbanks. Stratton was in the water for over two hours before his body was located and recovered. Two other males in the canoe were able to swim safely back to shore without injury. None of the males had personal flotation devices on board at the time of the incident.

On Sunday afternoon, a one-and-a half-year-old toddler fell into Big Lake and drowned. The baby, Liam Lloyd, had fallen off of a dock near the family cabin and into the lake. Lloyd was transported to shore where a trooper and two Coast Guard personnel, who were on the lake performing safety checks, attempted CPR on the child until EMS arrived. Lloyd was airlifted to Providence Hospital, but attempts to resuscitate him failed. Foul play is not suspected, but the investigation is continuing.

A 17-year-old boy who had been camping with friends at the Knik River near Palmer was pronounced dead early Saturday at Mat-Su Regional Medical Center. Troopers identified him as Joel Armstrong. Armstrong was camping with friends near Knik River Road in Palmer. When they woke up, they found their friend not breathing. He was transported to Mat-Su Regional Medical Center where he was pronounced dead. The cause of death is unknown, and the investigation is still ongoing.

Wildfire season started

A mix of lightning and human caused fires are responsible for a dozen wildfires burning in the Interior. Lightning started a 1,000-acre fire in the Delta Junction area. The largest fire in the state is the Coal Creek Fire, burning uninhabited country northeast of Healy. It burned 4,500 acres. Three hundred fire fighters are trying to subdue the Moose Mountain fire in Fairbanks, which consumed over 900 acres. A dozen new wildfires were reported in Alaska last week.

Learn impacts of chum bycatch management alternatives Follow rules to comment on meeting agenda topics

By Laurie McNicholas

The North Pacific Fishery Management Council has allocated 20 hours for an initial review of a Bering Sea chum salmon bycatch analysis. The review will begin with a staff presentation on Friday morning, June 10 at the Nome Recreation Center, reports Nicole Kimball, NPFMC fisheries analyst. (See a related story in this edition about the purpose of the analysis.)

The fairly lengthy staff presentation will cover the estimated impacts of four alternatives for chum bycatch management from the environmental assessment and regulatory impact review prepared for the council. "Council members will ask questions during the presentation, but they will not deliberate until after they have heard from the council's Science and Statistical Committee, Advisory Panel and the public," Kimball wrote in an email to The Nome Nugget.

"The SSC and AP will provide their reports to the council after the council receives the staff report on the analysis, and just before public testimony," Kimball continued. "The SSC will make recommendations related to their technical, scientific review of the analysis, to ensure it is robust, complete, and accurate on a scientific basis.

"The AP could recommend a preferred preliminary alternative, but they are not required to, and may not feel like they are ready to at this meeting," said Kimball. "The AP would likely focus recommendations on additions and changes to the analysis, which could include changes to the alternatives or options. This is everyone's opportunity, after having reviewed the estimated impacts, to see whether the alternatives are estimated to have the effect intended."

Kimball said staff for the council and the National Marine Fisheries Service will prepare a PowerPoint presentation. "This should help the public focus in on the summary of impacts," she noted. "We will have copies made prior to the council taking up this agenda item, but not before the SSC and AP reports. So we will provide copies to the public and council probably by late Wednesday or Thursday.

Making Public Comments

"I know we will have a lot of public testimony, and the time period allotted is three minutes to individuals and six minutes to someone representing an organization," Kimball added. "I know the chair is going to have to try to keep to those limits, in order to ensure that everyone signed up has a chance to testify."

Sign-up sheets are available at the registration table for those who wish to provide public comments to the council on a specific agenda item. Sign-up must be completed before public comment begins on that agenda item. Additional names are generally not accepted after public comment has begun.

The 15-member Scientific and Statistical Committee is composed of leading scientists in biology, economics, statistics and social science. The SSC advises the council on scientific and other technical matters. All SSC members serve one-year terms (Jan. 1 through Dec. 31). They may be reappointed or replaced by the council annually at the December council meeting.

The SSC will meet June 6-8 from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. at Pioneer Hall. The SSC calls for public comment immediately following the staff presentation on each agenda item. The committee will discourage testimony that does not directly address the technical issues of concern to the SSC. Presentations lasting more than five minutes will require prior approval from the chair.

The AP members represent major segments of the fishing industry; catching and processing, subsistence and commercial fishermen, observers, consumers, environmental/conservation, and sport fishermen. All 21 members of the AP serve one-year terms (Jan. 1 through Dec. 31). The council may reappoint or replace AP members annually at the December council meeting.

The AP will meet June 6-11 from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. at Old St. Joe's Hall. Members of the public must sign up for each topic on which they wish to testify before the AP. Sign-up sheets will be provided in a special notebook at the back of the room. The time available for individual and group testimony will be based on the number registered and will be determined by the AP chairman. The AP may not take public testimony on items for which they will not make recommendations to the council.

the past decade, peaking at 704,586 fish in 2005. Bycatch numbers have declined in recent years, dropping to 13,306 chum salmon in 2010.

A draft environmental assessment of the environmental effects of alternative measures to minimize chum salmon bycatch is ready for review by the council. So is a regulatory impact review that evaluates the social and economic effects of the alternatives. The council will base its decisions on these documents with input from the public.

The documents evaluate four alternatives for minimizing chum salmon bycatch:

(1) Status quo (no action); (2) a hardcap on chum bycatch ranging from 50,000 to 350,000 fish that if reached would cause directed fishing for pollock to cease; (3) triggered closures when specific cap levels are reached; and (4) triggered closure with intercooperative exemption. Alternative #4 proposes a closure to which the pollock fleet would be exempt for participating in a rolling hot spot program similar to the status quo.

Detailed options and suboptions accompany the alternatives. A description and comparison of the alternatives consumes more than half of a 39-page executive summary in the environmental assessment. Council staff will describe the estimated impacts of the alternatives from both the environmental assessment and regulatory impact review in a public presentation during the council meeting. (See information about providing public comments at the meeting in the story above.)

The council may select a preliminary preferred alternative for chum salmon bycatch management at next week's meeting and take final action at a meeting in October at Unalaska. The proposed action is to amend the Bering Sea Aleutian Islands groundfish management plan and federal regulations. The amendment must be consistent with all 10 national standards in the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Manage-

The most relevant MSA standards for this action are national standards #1 and #9, according to the environmental assessment. National standard #1 requires that conservation and management measures prevent overfishing while achieving on a continuing basis the optimum yield for each fishery for the U.S. fishing industry. National standard #9 requires that conservation and management measures shall, to the extent practicable, minimize bycatch; and to the extent bycatch cannot be avoided, minimize the mortality of such bycatch.

National standard #8 requires that conservation and management measures take into account the importance of fisheries resources to fishing communities to provide for sustained participation of, and minimize adverse impacts to, such communities (consistent with conservation requirements).

The problem statement developed by the council for the analysis includes this statement: "...The potential for high levels of chum salmon bycatch as well as long-term impacts of more moderate bycatch levels on conservation and abundance, may have adverse impacts on fishery dependent communities."

Norton Sound chum issues

Nome is a most appropriate setting for a discussion of chum salmon conservation measures in the pollock fishery. The Nome subdistrict has not had a commercial chum fishery since 1989. From 1999 through 2005, Tier II chum salmon fishing restrictions in the Nome subdistrict limited the number of permit holders who could fish for chum. In 1999 the chum subsistence harvest in the subdistrict totaled only 337 fish.

During the same period, Norton Sound as a whole experienced diminished chum runs. Norton Sound's average yearly commercial chum harvest for the 10-year period from 2000 through 2009 was 1,241 fish. Chum salmon are highly val-

Board hears from principal and parents about balanced classrooms

By Lori Head

Through quiet halls with empty bulletin boards, Nome's school board met on May 24, at the elementary school. Mike Brawner, future superintendent, connected via Skype.

NES Balanced classroom model

Most controversial of topics was a PowerPoint presentation by Dave Keller, principal of Nome Elementary School, as he educated the board on his attempt to create balanced or blended classrooms for the next school year at NES. Referring to the history of granting all parent requests for specific teachers, Keller stated, "Unfortunately, what that has resulted in is imbalance in classrooms. Imbalance with respect to ethnicity and imbalance with respect to student performance levels. For that reason, it was necessary to make some changes to the process.'

Responding to the imbalance, Keller set the acceptable limit for each teacher's classroom at 33 percent for parent requests. Using Teacher Alice as an example, Keller explained that with an estimated enrollment of 16 students his new process would allow five parent requests (33 percent of 16 students = 5.28) to be honored. However, if 12 parents requested Teacher Alice, using a random numbers table, five requests would be honored, seven would not.

According to Keller's data summary, he received 65 parent requests. With his new 33 percent formula he was able to grant 50 requests. Of the 15 requests not granted, four more were inadvertently placed in requested classes as teachers met and attempted to create balanced classrooms. Teachers used several factors to balance classrooms: gender, ethnicity, special needs, and a performance level of "Benchmark," "Strategic," or "Intensive."

Historically, nearly 100 percent of requests have been granted, and this new process was consequently not appreciated by several parents who addressed the board during the Hearing of Delegations/Individuals section of the meeting. Paula Johanson began reading a letter to the board and was unable to continue as Board President Gloria Karmun stated, "a work session format's not the appropriate place to hear a complaint about personnel."

Marguerite LaRiviere spoke to the process, rather than the outcome, stating, "As a parent I want to be involved...I just didn't feel I had a voice." She also spoke to the new formula saying, "Unless I missed it, it would have been nice to know, 'Hey, it's only going to be 30 percent this year. And this, in advance, is my process — before you submit your teacher requests."

Marcy Merrill explained that although she was satisfied with any of the prospective teachers for her two elementary students, she felt as though the process made parents feel like the rug was pulled out from under them and a "Thanks, but we're not really that interested in your opinion" feeling resulted.

Keller also entertained an impromptu Q & A session where Julie Kelso asked if he had tried to create balanced classrooms honoring 100 percent of the parent requests. He answered that his understanding from teachers was that through the history of honoring all parent requests imbalances were created and, therefore, he had not tried. Kelso concluded with, "If you don't try, you don't know.

Beltz softball/soccer or running field proposal

Mitch Erickson, parent, has patiently advocated for a softball field, soccer field or running track out at Beltz for six or seven years. He showed aerial photos of potential sites and shared pictures of students playing on a current playground of Nome-Beltz Junior Senior High School – a parking lot of dirt and rocks.

Erickson cited potential funds from the Rasmussen Foundation who donated $225,000 to Sitka "to build basically the same thing," or NSEDC's $100,000 Community Benefit Share Program, but has "lost out every time on that to the swimming pool mostly, and most recently I lost out to street lights."

Ultimately, Erickson asked the school board to put this "worthy project" on their docket and begin researching what needed to be done to begin putting the idea and funding together.

Breakfast program at NBHS

Per the board's request, Ryan Hodges, NPS Purchasing Agent and Food Services Coordinator, presented a breakfast program that would comply with federal requirements for the USDA School Breakfast Program and the costs associated with it.

Hodges used the example of powdered milk, canned peaches, home baked bread and a meat or meat alternative (eggs, cheese, beans) as a breakfast that would meet requirements. He then added costs of two cooks for three hours a day, electricity, transportation, wear and tear, supplies and custodial services to the recipe. After federal reimbursements, Hodges estimated the program would still cost the school district $36,880.80.

Currently, the elementary school is funded year to year on a small breakfast snack program that hands out fruit, granola bars and/or yogurt for about $15,000. It does not meet SBP's requirements and therefore does not receive federal reimbursements. Superintendent Jon Wehde felt that this program could be duplicated at the jr/sr high school level for a similar price tag.

Nanook Café

Steve Gast, principal of Nome Beltz Jr/Sr High said he is in "deep discussion" with the superintendent, Nome Nanook Booster Club and community members regarding a Nanook Café. Gast surveyed the students and found that 87 percent of them would be interested in purchasing breakfast type foods and 89 percent would be interested in a free granola bar and piece of fruit. He has been entertaining the idea of opening up Beltz's Nanook Room from 7:30 a.m. to 8:20 a.m. as a Nanook Café with tall tables, and students hired to run it. This is currently "a vision" with a one- to two-year plan of fruition.

Gast also reported that the Booster Club has received a $38,000 grant to help Beltz concession sales;$18,000 will purchase heavy equipment such as refrigerators and freezers at Beltz and the remaining $20,000 will be spent on reusable, renewable supplies that all teams can purchase for the same, low price and then sell as concessions for a profit. "It gives every group the chance to make the same amount of money," explained Gast.

District office dormitory room usage

Wehde addressed the topic by stating that the dorms are largely not being used and that the board may want to consider turning them into revenue bearing units in the future. He explained that the dorms have the potential of 10 two-room, private bath apartments with a shared kitchen and laundry facility. Currently, there are three two-bedroom ued as a food and cultural resource throughout the region.

The Nome subdistrict reverted back to Tier I subsistence fishing regulations in 2006 because projected runs of chum salmon exceeded the amount necessary for subsistence. In 2007 the Board of Fisheries accepted a recommendation from the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game to reclassify Nome subdistrict chum stock from a management concern to a yield concern, which is less severe than a management concern.

From 2005-2009 a majority of chum salmon escapement goals were achieved, but yields were low compared to historical yields in the 1980s. In 2010 the Board of Fisheries decided to continue the yield of concern classification for the stock. Last year 372 Tier I subsistence permit holders caught 3,124 chums in the Nome subdistrict.

The board of fisheries has classified the chum salmon stock in the Golovin and Elim subdistricts as a stock of yield concern since 2000 due to a chronic inability to meet escapement needs. From 2005 through 2009, subsistence chum salmon harvests averaged 1,767 in the Golovin subdistrict and 1,216 fish in the Elim subdistrict, according to ADF&G reports. In most years since 2003, chum runs have been insufficient to allow for a commercial harvest in either subdistrict.

However, the 2010 chum run was strong enough to conduct a commercial chum harvest and reach escapement goals in both subdistricts. The commercial harvest of chums totaled 117,000 fish last year, with Elim fishers catching 23,630 chums and Golovin permit holders taking 16,984 chums. The Unalakleet and Shaktoolik subdistricts harvested 60 percent of the catch.

Jim Menard, ADF&G area manager for Norton Sound and Kotzebue, foresees an above average run of chums in Norton Sound this year. "Buyer interest in chum salmon has been increasing in recent years, and the harvest could be 90,000 to 120,000 fish," he said. "Chums in the 2006 age class are coming back to Norton Sound as five year olds, and they did well as three and four year olds."

Kawerak supports hardcap

The board of directors of Kawerak, Inc. had adopted a resolution calling for a hardcap on chum by-catch of 30,000 fish annually. The resolution states: "Kawerak does hereby request that the North Pacific Fishery Management Council institute a hard cap of 30,000 chum by-catch and that the pollock fishery is closed upon reaching the hardcap with no sector allocations, no sector transfers, and no cooperative provisions."

Rose Atuk Fosdick, vice president of Kawerak's natural resources division, said the Kawerak board decided to support a chum bycatch limit of 30,000 fish even though the number is below the bycatch hardcap range (50,000 to 353,000 chum) evaluated in the environmental assessment and regulatory impact review.

"Our main goal is to reduce the bycatch of chum headed back to this region," Fosdick emphasized. She noted that Norton Sound chum harvests still are well below those of 25 years ago. She indicated the Kawerak board will consider all information about the chum salmon bycatch analysis that is presented at the council meeting.

Kawerak sponsored a training session May 10 to prepare attendees to present comments on the chum bycatch analysis and other agenda topics of local interest at the council meeting. Fosdick said a followup meeting to discuss such topics will take place at 6 p.m. on Thursday, June 9 at the Kawerak boardroom. "It's open to the public, and I hope many people will show up," she added. Fosdick said Kawerak won't tell anyone how to testify, but will explain how to provide input to the council.

Others voice concern

The Seward Peninsula Subsistence Advisory Council also has recommended limiting chum salmon bycatch in the pollock fishery to 30,000 fish a year. The SPSAC is one of 10 regional advisory councils to the Federal Subsistence Board, which oversees the federal subsistence management program in Alaska. The Federal Subsistence Board has recommended a bycatch hardcap of 50,000 chum salmon.

The NPFMC's Rural Community Outreach Committee met with eight regional western Alaska organizations between December 2010 and mid-March 2011 to gather input on chum salmon bycatch issues. The outreach report prepared for the council indicates that residents of western Alaska communities are concerned about the waste associated with salmon bycatch in the pollock industry and its potential impact on the number of salmon returning to rivers.

The draft environmental assessment for Bering Sea non-Chinook (chum) salmon bycatch management, the regulatory impact review and the outreach report are available for downloading at the NPFMC web site, www.fakr.noaa.gov/npfmc.

Special session falls through, coastal management program doomed

By Diana Haecker

Last week, legislators were told to make plans to travel to Juneau by Monday, May 30 for a second special session to save the Alaska Coastal Management program from sun-setting and leaving Alaskans with no seat at the table when it comes to development or protection of Alaska coastal zones.

The Senate leadership met on Sunday morning and said that they are ready and willing to go into a special session to save the program.

NSHC, would have incurred a financial injury of $368,000 by the time he reached his retirement age of 67 in 2031. That figure derived from subtracting Smith's current salary from his job at Akeela House from what he would have made if he continued to work at NSHC with no change in NSHC salary. Juliussen argued that there was no guarantee Smith's job would have existed for another 20 years, or that the salary would have remained constant.

Smith worked as a clinician and clinical coordinator. The NSHC marched Smith out of the building under security escort in January 2010 after he received a letter of intent to terminate. Smith came from New York and went to work for BHS in 1999. Smith argued that a list of improvements he received and made following an unfavorable evaluation, in 2009, that followed good evaluations, equaled a contract that the hospital corporation broke when it gave him a letter of intent to terminate.

NSHC broke an implied contract and broke an "implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing" with the dismissal, Smith said.

Juliussen, in his motion Friday, said the discussion and list of improvements Smith needed to achieve were optional on the part of NSHC, as Smith was an at-will employee with no reason needed for termination. A "covenant of fair dealing and good faith" could not add something to the at-will contract, Juliussen said. But there was cause for the dismissal, NSHC said.

There was precedent from cases in higher Alaska courts saying a covenant of fair dealing and good faith could not alter a contract, Esch said in his ruling.

"Pursuant to the agreement of the parties, Mr. Smith was an at-will employee," Esch said.

The current NSHC Employee Handbook spells out the at-will employment practice at NSHC.

"All employees, unless they are employed under a written employment contract signed by the President/CEO [sic] which establishes otherwise, are employed on an atwill basis and nothing in this Handbook should be construed as a contract or a guarantee of continued employment," the handbook reads. "This means the employee or NSHC can terminate the employment relationship at any time and for any reason with or without notice or cause."

Smith acknowledged receiving an earlier employee manual that contained the at-will employment policy. Where there is a labor union agreement in place, usually one of the conditions is that employees cannot be fired without cause. No union covers NSHC employees.

Robert D. Lewis, attorney for Smith, said that a grant application drawn up during Smith's employment stated goals that Smith would pursue in the work covered. That conveyed an expectation of continued employment.

For a period during Smith's last year on the job, NSHC retained a consultant to help iron out problems in the Behavioral Health Department. At the end of the analysis and resultant restructuring, the department's employees had to resign and reapply for their jobs. Smith felt he had been made a scapegoat for the negative issues, he said. NSHC said employees had to reapply to see where they fit in the new structure and to determine if they wanted a reconfigured job.

Smith currently works at another substance abuse program run by the state, Akeela House, locally through Dept. of Corrections. He got that job a month or so after termination from his job at NSHC, he testified.

"We are exploring our options, perhaps one is to seek to reverse the decision," Smith said in an interview Friday evening. "I lost on a technicality, but what it has done, is bring me closer to some people. I got that out of it. I fought the good fight. My attorney, Bob Lewis, did a good job for me.

"I was interested in clearing my name, more than anything else. I feel the firing could have been handled more fairly and diplomatically," Smith said.

As Esch dismissed the panel and thanked them, he praised the 12 jurors and two alternates, saying that he had never experienced a jury so prompt. Indeed, the jury did consistently return from lunch and breaks on time. During the four-and-a-half day court session, jurors appeared alert and listening, with about half taking notes in court-provided note-books.

Norton Sound said Smith's work as a clinician was very good; issues existed with his administration of paper trails, punctuality and interpersonal relationships with staff and agencies. Smith said issues resulted from understaffing of the facility and his overzealousness in advocating for his clients. The head of an Anchorage mental health facility characterized Smith as an "angry New Yorker," NSHC said.

The rift that had plagued first the regular and then the first legislative special session regarding the program has deepened, and House speaker Mike Chenault (R-Nikiski) said that a special session won't be taking place because the Alaska Senate failed to agree on the House version of the bill, which died in special session

In a press release Chenault said,

"Why would we go back into special session to vote on something that was twice failed by the House on the last day of the last special session?" The House voted down a compromise bill that had been worked out by a joint Senate and House conference committee.

Chenault said that the House had offered a compromise with five changes the Senate originally wanted, but that the conference committee report was not acceptable to House members. However, the House vote was slim; only one vote would have been needed to pass the bill.

The coastal management program is touted as the most powerful tool to influence federal decision-making when it comes to coastal zoning. The the Memorial Day Parade gathered on Front Street in front of the State Office Building. Parade music was piped into the street over the city's sound system and seagulls gave their lonely cry overhead. A stalwart group of Nomeites clutching flags and dressed in various shades of red, white and blue marched along with the VFW and the American Legion veterans. The Nome-Beltz Junior ROTC, individuals walked the route to the cemetery.

The absence of the Alaska National Guard and Army Guard who are active duty in Iraq or Afghanistan left an empty spot in the parade but filled the memories of those who were present.

A still silence filled the windless salty air as the marchers lined up in the still brown grass in front of the graves near the speaker's podium. Rev. Julie Elmore gave the opening prayer and VFW Commander Mel Matthews, VFW Auxiliary Peggy Darling and Mayor Denise Michels gave short speeches and read poetry. The parade marched down the hill to Belmont Point, and a wreath and a cross were tossed into the water in memory of those who were lost at sea in service to this country.

Marchers returned to town and wrapped their cold hands around a cup of hot chocolate or coffee.

Deadly climbing season

A fatal fall high on Mount Denali took the lives of two climbers last week and severely injured two others. These are the third and fourth deaths on Mt. McKinley this year, with seven deaths overall in the Alaska Range this climbing season. Park rangers spotted a four-person rope team about a thousand feet below the trail from Denali Pass, and then heard a shout for help. A hasty team confirmed that lead guide Suzanne Allen, 34, of Seattle, Washington and client Peter Bullard, 45, of Shanghai, China had died in the fall.

The other two injured climbers were placed in rescue litters and lowered to the 17,200-foot high camp for emergency medical treatment. Gary Burke, age 31, of Dallas, Texas was responsive and in stable condition with a broken leg and head injury. The second patient, 30-year-old James Mohr of Camp Pendleton, California was non-responsive with labored breathing.

Details on the cause of the fall remain unknown. Similar to a fatal fall that occurred on May 16, the fourperson team was beginning the traverse from Denali Pass to the 17,200-foot camp along a 45-degree slope of very hard, windblown snowpack. Climbers returning from the upper elevations of the mountain report more difficult conditions than average due to the lack of new snow and an icy, wind-scoured trail.

NIH niacin study stopped early

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

A government-sponsored study has been stopped 18 months early because niacin, a vitamin packaged as a long-acting drug called Niaspan, did not prevent heart attacks, strokes, or hospitalizations for heart disease.

Niacin, taken in high doses, has been scientifically shown to raise a person's HDL (good cholesterol) and lower triglycerides (blood fats).

Testing HDL cholesterol and triglyceride levels is recommended for adults at least once a year to determine overall heart health status.

The undesirable combination of a low HDL cholesterol level and high triglycerides, called dyslipidemia, is a strong predictor of cardiovascular disease. In a large study sponsored by the National Institute of Health, researchers had hoped that using niacin to raise HDL and lower triglycerides would also lower a person's risk for heart disease and strokes. It did not.

This might be compared to Tylenol and fevers. We know that Tylenol does not treat infections. It treats symptoms and makes people more comfortable as their bodies fight off an infection. Fever is a strong indicator of infection, and acetaminophen (Tylenol) lowers a fever, but lowering a fever with acetaminophen does not treat an infection. In the same way, raising a person's HDL (good cholesterol) with niacin does not treat heart disease.

This is not the first time researchers have been disappointed by a drug that improves cholesterol lab numbers but fails to change outcomes significantly.

Several other medications, including ezetimibe (Zetia) and fenofibrate (Tricor), have been found to raise good cholesterol (HDL) levels, but fail to stop heart attacks and strokes.

Listen closely to commercials for these drugs and you will likely catch this admission in the verbal fine

The NIH study findings should not be taken as bad news. All research, even when the findings are negative, adds something to our knowledge of how the body works. In this case, the niacin study is a reminder that a medication that changes a risk factor does not necessarily change actual risk.

It should also serve as a reminder that a pill cannot replace a healthy lifestyle. A diet low in added sugar and high in healthy fats combined with daily physical activity has been shown to raise the HDL, lower triglycerides, and, most important, lower the risk of cardiovascular dis-

Saying it Sincerely

A World of Hope By Fr. Ross Tozzi, Saint Joseph Catholic Church

Member of the Nome Ministerial Association
I recently saw a religious quote that described humans as "utterly depraved." No doubt, we are well aware of many sinful actions committed by men and women. The Seawall reminds us each week of the allegation of crimes in our midst. State, national, and global news are all filled with stories of man's inhumanity to man. Unjust wars, incomprehensible genocide, and numerous human atrocities give evidence to how dark the human being can be when one embraces evil. The history of the human race, however, is not limited to the dark and the depraved.

The world that I see is not one of utter depravity but rather a world that was created by God to be good, life giving, sacred and holy. We are created in the likeness and image of God. We fail and we fail often to live up to our human potential. But at the core, what God has created is good and we share in the goodness of God. The story of creation in Genesis reminds us, "God looked at everything he had made, and he found it very good" (1:31). We also must look through the eyes of Goodness to see the decency that abounds.

With a little effort, it is easy to see all that is good. Just as the beauty of nature warms the heart, the unsightly garbage that the winter thaw reveals spurs us to clean up the mess and pledge once again to do better. The randomness of cancer and our empathy for those who suffer spurs us to search for a cure and to run Relays for Life.

The death of individuals due to the cold encourages community members to offer an emergency shelter. The abuse of alcohol causes us to look far and wide for ways we can help good people who suffer from terrible addictions. The ravages of war, eventually lead us to seek a peace that is just and lasting. Each human failure offers the hope of a future triumph.

In a world of utter depravity, there would be no possibility for things to ever get better. The only solution to capital crimes would be capital punishment. The only way to deal with repeat offenders would be to lock them up and throw the keys away. But the world is not hopeless, nor is the human being utterly depraved. In the loneliness and isolation that results from sin, man is left empty and can only reach up to a higher power ever ready to offer forgiveness and redemption.

The good world created by God is sustained by our Creator's love. Out of love, the father sent his only begotten son to redeem mankind and free us from the bondage of sin. Whatever depravity a man might be capable of; it is ultimately a forgivable offense. We need look no farther than the cross. As the Son of God was being crucified, the most utterly depraved act in human history, Jesus responded with love, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do.'

Inspired by the example of Jesus, I see all that humanity is called to be. I do not see a hopeless and utter depravity; rather I see the way and the truth and the life.

Special session doomed

program meant jobs for 33 state employees, and it was a one-stop shop, for developers to have their projects reviewed and passed on to several state agencies for permitting.

Alaska has participated in the voluntary federal-state partnership under the coastal zone management for 32 years. The program's intention is that state and local interests are addressed in managing coastal resources, and it requires that federal actions be consistent with state policies - but only if the state has an approved program.

In a summary of impacts from the loss of the program, the Senate sent out a list of consequences should the program be allowed to sunset, including the loss of the requirement that offshore oil and gas developers have to adhere to the state's strict oil spill prevention requirements. "It is a shame that the program is going to be turned over to the feds - we've already relinquished enough powers to them. We wish the Senate would've agreed to an actual compromise instead of more of the same," added House speaker Chenault.

US Senator Mark Begich also weighed in and fired off a letter to Senate president Gary Stevens, House speaker Chenault and Governor Sean Parnell. "Federal authorities no longer would be required to ensure that their actions in areas such as aquaculture, oil spill response, forestry and mining are consistent with state policies, as the Coastal Zone Management Act currently requires," Begich wrote.

Begich said he is particularly concerned about oil and gas development. "My area of greatest concern is how expiration of the ACMP will affect oil and gas development on the North Slope," Begich warned. "The Deep Water Port Act requires a state to have, or be making progress toward having an approved coastal zone management program in order to build an off-shore, deepwater port in federal waters. The gradual slope of the ocean floor off the coast of the North Slope requires one to go many miles offshore to reach water deep enough to accommodate the large, deep-draft vessels associated with oil and gas production and transportation. Without the ACMP, oil and gas operators will not have the option to develop an offshore deepwater port, which could significantly impair their operations.'

The coastal management program was gutted from local input with an executive order by then-Governor Frank Murkowski, who disbanded a coastal management advisory board, which allowed for local input. The program was never fixed, and the conference committee's compromise bill included seven items that attempted to give local residents a voice. These items included clarification of the definition of local knowledge versus scientific evidence, removal for cause (not at will) from the Coastal Management Board, a six-year sunset clause and a requirement for a second report on the status of the program to be made in four years.

Governor Sean Parnell didn't comment or send out a press release in response, but he did post a lengthy Facebook note saying that the Senate version of the bill was loaded with problems. "For example, consider the multiple adversarial reviews the Senate Majority wanted to establish," Parnell wrote. "The cumulative impact of four reviews in six years would have guaranteed an adversarial process from 2011 through 2016 rather than a cooperative venture to provide local input while growing our economy.

Parnell went on to say that he was concerned with the wide scope of authority granted and lack of accountability of the Coastal Policy Board and the broad new application of local knowledge and whether there is a realistic check based in science. Parnell offered the explanation that the "cumulative impact of all the Senate changes to the House version and the Senate Majority's unwillingness to compromise when they were notified multiple times that the votes were not there in the House just weighed down the bill too heavily Parnell said that the Senate's version tipped the House's "finely crafted balance too far towards the environmental perspective (away from jobs/economy)...

Parnell said that employees working for the ACMP already have begun looking for work elsewhere. 'Additionally, we are exploring all the ways Alaskans now have to participate in the federal permitting process that were not in existence when U.S. coastal policy was established decades ago," Parnell wrote. House minority leader Beth Ker-tulla (D-Juneau) expressed disappointment about the House leadership's decision not to convene a special session. Kertulla acknowledged that Alaskans express outrage and frustration that a vital program like the ACMP is lost due to political maneuvering.

"Alaskans elect us to be statesmen and women and to work together to resolve issues for Alaska's benefit," Kertulla said. "That is not happening with coastal zone, and it hurts all Alaskans. The coastal zone program is essential if Alaska is to have any say in planning federal projects off Alaska's coast. It's past time for those holding the fate of the program, and the jobs of its 33 employees, in their hands to put their differences aside and enact a strong coastal management program for Alaska."

Dear Editor

Oil tax – again!

There has been media misinformation regarding Governor Parnell's oil tax legislation. The Make Alaska Competitive Coalition (MACC) supported Parnell. However, they "may have oversimplified and/or misinterpreted the survey results and the degree of negativity it reflects on Alaska" (Legislative Research Services Report 11.245, 3/29/11), and they may have acted unethically (Neil Davis, "Dose of Reality," The Ester Republic, April-May/2011). Nevertheless, the Fairbanks Daily News-Miner (FDNM) editors and the Fairbanks Chamber of Commerce joined MACC in supporting Parnell's proposal.

Some clarifying facts are in order. ACES (Alaska's Clear and Equitable Share) is working and generating more revenue than PPT or ELF. TAPS is predicted to operate above 200,000 barrels/day until 2039 - not including new production. The ACES effective tax rate, after tax credits and industry costs, is about 28% at $101/barrel (Alaska North Slope West Coast, 5/25/11). Alaska has generous tax credits for the oil industry, and capital spending and drilling have increased under ACES. Industry employment is level or slightly up (Alaska Department of Labor, 4/22/11); unfortunately, industry employment for new hires is about 50% non-residents. Exploratory wells are down, but this could be due to yearly variations or use of advanced production technology. New North Slope developmental wells averaged 145 per year between 2006 and 2010, peaking at 164 in 2010. The Alaska Oil and Gas. Conservation Commission reported 13 operational rigs on the North Slope (5/10/11), which contradicted the FDNM's report of five working drill rigs in Alaska (5/12/11).

Some will challenge these facts but they are verifiable. Alaska is behind in auditing the oil industry and should not adjust ACES until all the facts are known.

Alaska should support exploration, development and production of oil — but not at a $2 billion giveaway. ACES needs fine-tuning for the maximum benefit of Alaskans not the oil industry.

Dear Editor,

I am writing you this on Memorial Day weekend. I find Alaska's indifference to its World War II history disturbing. As a territory, Alaska and Hawaii were on the frontline of hostilities with the Japanese Empire and vet little has been done to memorialize the war here.

In Hawaii, wreckage of the USS Arizona was set aside as a memorial, as was the USS Utah. The USS Missouri is moored nearby as a museum ship, as is the fleet submarine USS Bowfin. Two other survivors of Pearl Harbor, the USCGC Taney and the Navy tug USS Hoga are floating museum ships in the Lower 48.

Yet in Alaska, nothing. Can this be rectified? After years have passed and most of sailors and soldiers having passed "over the bar?" Are there WW II ships available? Ships with Alaskan associations during those troubling times?

A group in Juneau is attempting to undoubtable Storis spent its war years in the North Atlantic near Greenland. It became well-known here for its post-war rescues in Alaskan waters. Their effort deserves support. Another contender, the WW II vintage cutter Acushnet has been sold off by the GSA. There is one WW II hulk left. The land the venerable USCGC Storis, a proud ship relegated to the dead fleet in Suisun Bay, California. But the former coast guard cutter Onondaga lies sunken in the backwater of the Ballard Ship Canal in Washington State. The Onondaga is the last survivor of the Battle of Dutch Harbor. EPA divers recently surveyed the hull looking for pollution but found none. Washington is looking to remove it as a derelict vessel in keeping with a recently passed state law.

Is the Onondaga salvageable? Maybe. Others have worked with worse. The Turks saved the WW I mine-layer Nusret from a sunken saltwater grave, rebuilding its superstructure on the hull once the hull was ensconced on shore. For those interested in what the Onondaga looked like, google up its sister, the former cutter Mohawk (WPG-79), a successful museum ship in Key West, Florida.

The Onondaga is Alaska's last chance to have a WW II vessel associated with its war years. Years that should be commemorated in a meaningful way.

Council makes sense of dollars and cents

By Sandra L. Medearis

'Tis the season for the City of Nome to decide how to spend money for maintenance and operations in spending year 2011-2012. Over the past week and longer, the Nome Common Council has mulled over budgets presented by Nome Joint Utility System and the Nome Public Schools boards. These panels in turn passed along budgets initiated by utility and school administrators.

By law, the City's contribution had to be set last week. The council did so, giving the schools the lawfully required four mills from property tax and addingadditional funding: about $800,000. Four mills equal four times the value of one mill worth $244,000. The value of a mill is set on property valuation. The schools will be receiving then, from the City, about $1.750 million from property tax money.

In other budget action, the Council approved NJUS negotiated three-year contracts with both the International Union of Operating Engineers, Local 302, and the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 1547. For Local 302, the 2010 rate of hourly base rate will remain the same at $32.41 an hour; however, the employees will receive a three-percent raise based on that hourly times three, effective on Jan. 1, 2011, 2012 and 2013.

The IBEW 1547 members in line distribution will receive the existing $33.83 per hour, with the same three-percent raises annually for three years. These contracts run out on the last day of 2013.

Most AFT and APEA employees are at the end of their five year step and range schedule. These employees will also receive a three-percent raise annually for three years. Utilities manager John Handeland said Monday that a water and sewer worker starts at $21.80 per hour and grosses $27.00 an hour after five years.

Proposed district goes from Bering Sea to Yukon border

By Sandra L. Medearis

They are going to love it—all the people who testified against stretching District 39 all the way to the Canadian border. This is what the state Redistricting Board has proposed, despite the wishes of locals attending a meeting in Nome on April 26, who asked that the district boundaries not be altered to go "all the way across the state to the Canadian border."

However, the configuration could change before the final adoption deadline June 14.

The five-member panel drew the boundaries of District 39 to start on the coast just south of Stebbins-St. Michael, run north along the Bering Sea to include Shishmaref, run east including Wiseman, Coldfoot and Arctic Village. Then the line follows the border of Canada south to include McCarthy and turns back westward and north to include Gulkana, Gakona and Dot Lake. Then it goes west again running along south of Rampart, drops south and turns west excluding Lake Minchumina until it gets south of Kaltag, then connects with the beginning of the outline on the coast. The area contains many Yukon River villages. Some of the added villages have less than 100 inhabitants.

Another proposed plan on the table in April held District 39 much as it was, but stretched it north to include Shishmaref and southward to include Marshal and Russian Mission villages in order to make up for population losses in Western Alaska.

Interested voters who came to the meeting in Nome noted the obvious, that travel across a long east-west district would be expensive and taxing, necessary by air without a road connection and even without flights going west-east. Elder Dan Karmun urged the representatives of the redistricting panel to be mindful of common languages as in the existing District 39. Others asked that the redistricting group consider common economic development goals and common subsistence lifestyles.

Federal law says that legislative districts must be redrawn after the 10-year census to make them equal in population. Additionally, the Voting Rights Act of 1965 said there could be no denial or abridgement of voting rights because of minority status in race, color or language. The minority group must be large, cohesive and vote as a bloc. There can be no retrogression, meaning that lines cannot be drawn that lessen the voting power of a minority group. The new District 39 has an Alaska Native population, pure or mixed ethnicity, of about 72 percent. The current Dis-

NPFMC to review northern Bering Sea research plan

By Laurie McNicholas

The North Pacific Fishery Management Council is scheduled to review an outline for a study of the effects of bottom trawling on the Northern Bering Sea Research Area beginning Thursday afternoon, June 9 at the Mini Convention Center. The NBSRA extends from a boundary above St. Matthew Island to Wales and is closed to bottom trawl fishing while the council develops a research plan for the area.

The environmental and biological characteristics of the NBSRA are largely unknown, and essentially no commercial bottom trawling has taken place in the area.

Based on evidence of a northward expansion of groundfish distribution into the northern Bering Sea due to climate change, the council anticipated a corresponding interest in commercial bottom trawling in the area. For that reason, the council established the NBRSA in Amendment 89 to the Fishery Management Plan for Groundfish of the Bering Sea and Aleutian Islands Management Area in July 2007.

The Alaska Fisheries Science Center of the National Marine Fisheries Service has prepared a research plan outline for the NBSRA at the council's request. The AFSC also will report findings of a 2010 NMFS bottom trawl survey in the NBSRA, summarize outcomes of a science workshop and a community/subsistence workshop held to gather input for an NBSRA research plan, and consult with the council on the choice of study sites and subsistence concerns.

The Kawerak, Inc. board of directors has adopted a resolution requesting that NMFS ban all bottom trawl fishing in the NBSRA.

Letters -

Dear Nancy,

It is hard to put in exact words the joy I experienced while home on my one-month special leave from the Peace Corps. I could rattle off my countless burgers at Airport Pizza or my excitement at seeing my friends' two-year-old kids. I could talk about my half-dozen trips to our neat, neat library or seeing close friends at their summer jobs. I could tell you that I started crying when the jet took off and I knew that it would be at least another year before I set back down in my home.

But none of that really captures how awesome I felt having people stop me on the side of the road to welcome me home or ask me about my last two-and-a-half years (wanting a real answer). I used to wonder how everyone in Nome knew the business of every other Nomeite. My dad said it was because we truly care about everybody and therefore, we know everything about that person. This is so totally true and so totally wonderful.

Thank you, Nome. See you all soon.

Sad State of Affairs

What's best for Alaska should be the basic rule of thumb behind every meeting of the legislature. Our politicians are sent to Juneau to represent the people who elected them. There are times, however, when politicians have to look at the big picture and consider how their action or inaction impacts the rest of the state.

Alaska is our nation's largest state. We are huge, with a multitude of cultures, and diverse surroundings from forest to tundra, mountains to rivers and oceans. However, we share a common thread— we are Alaskans. This is something many of our politicians in Juneau, including our governor just don't see. It seems they close their eyes to issues that are not of their immediate concern. Not every politician represents the coastal portions of Alaska. They see themselves as interior or urban legislators. They see themselves as instruments to tear down regulations that were put in place to protect the little guy. They see themselves as friends of big businesses that want to get rid of legislation that protects the land and folks who live off the land. They want to give away the store with outrageous tax breaks. They see themselves as promoting development by ingratiating Alaska to foreign business cartels. In fact, these big companies don't give a darn about Alaskans and consider us rather dim. (Recall that NovaGold called us "benighted," and that has nothing to do with royalty or the amount of daylight. It means we are ignorant and in the dark.)

Our state legislature has let us down big time. Their refusal to renew the Alaska Coastal Management Program is beyond belief. How could a responsible legislature allow this to happen? They should be ashamed of themselves, but instead show no remorse. Alaskans who live in coastal communities are on the short end of the stick. Let's not even think about how they want to reshape our District 39 to go all they way to the Canadian border. What a joke. Our bush senators and representatives are outvoted by legislators who would cut off their nose to spite their face and by a governor who has his own agenda.

Dear Editor.

Something has been wrong with Norton Sound chum salmon for almost 30 years.

As a biologist, I find it very unsatisfying that no one can say for sure what is causing the problem. Unfortunately, we don't have the scientific data needed to determine conclusively what is wrong, but for some reason our chum salmon stocks are not as productive as they were in the past.

The numbers of fish returning to Norton Sound rivers most years is not enough to sustain the salmon populations let alone enough to support the needs of salmon users. Subsistence fishing is a shadow of what it was in the past, and commercial salmon fishing in the Nome area is a distant memory. It's been more than 20 years since there was a commercial salmon fishery here.

Some Norton Sound chum salmon are caught in the June fishery at Area M; at least they were in 1987 when tags were recovered by Norton Sound fishermen from fish tagged at area M. Area M fishermen primarily target red salmon and catch chums incidental to that fishery. When chum prices are low compared to reds, they probably would rather not catch chums, but there is no way to avoid them and Area M fishermen often take more than a million chums.

Norton Sound chum salmon are also caught as bycatch incidental to the pollock trawl fisheries. Unfortunately, there is currently no way to accurately tell how many of the fish were from Norton Sound stocks as opposed to one of the many other western Alaska summer chum stocks from Bristol Bay to Kivalina. DNA analysis has not been able to differentiate the various stocks at levels sufficiently detailed to determine, for example, how many of them would have returned to the Nome River had they not been intercepted, killed and tossed over the rail by the trawlers.

Ulu News

By Senator Donald Olson Senate District T

Coastal Management Program Update

It was disappointing to see HB 106 (the ACMP extension and reform bill) fail to pass the House during the special session. I had focused on this issue this past session (and the five sessions prior) because the changes made by former Gov. Murkowski weakened coastal communities' input on coastal management. I believe that as your Senator it is my duty to help protect our way of life, and because the ocean is such an important component to our existence I sought to strengthen our input on coastal management. However, let me be clear: I do not want to stop development. Alaska depends on resource development. I only want the state, the federal government, and industry to consult and work side-by-side with us to extract resources in the most environmentally and culturally sensitive method.

The Legislature should have passed the Senate's version of the bill that included changes to the program that are important to our district and the state. My office and I worked diligently on this. We hoped to re-establish the Coastal Policy Board and give Coastal Districts a meaningful voice at the table when decisions are made regarding development in the coastal zone. Another change I strongly supported was making sure that 'scientific evidence' did not trump 'local knowledge' in coastal management decisions. For thousands of years, Alaskans have passed down generations' worth of knowledge as to how our ecosystems work. That 'local knowledge' helps us better sustain and benefit from our natural resources.

The ACMP creates a process to guarantee that state, local and federal entities join forces and reach policy agreements to allow for responsible economic development, creating a win-win-win situation for all. It's actually quite sad because as a state we are constantly asking for more control of our state from the federal government. It seems hypocritical that our state leaders would deny our local governments the same privilege we ask for as a state.

If the ACMP dissolves on July 1, as it's scheduled to by law, there will be a loss of approximately 34 state jobs and many others jobs in local governments. The program currently provides more than $700,000 to 28 local coastal governments to enable them to participate. What's more, it is my fear that the collaborative efforts between local, state, and national leadership will come to a standstill.

I agree with other Bush legislators (representatives Joule, Edgmon, and Herron) when they stated in the Anchorage Daily News that the program "is the only process we have that streamlines development by bringing all parties to the table, including industry, multiple state

Northern Waters Task Force news

The Alaska State Legislature created the Northern Waters Task Force during the 2010 legislative session in response to the many changes that are occurring in the northern oceans. In recent years, decreasing sea ice and the world's continued appetite for natural resources has brought increased interest and focus on the Arctic. The future of the Arctic will be a dynamic one bringing both opportunities and challenges with mineral extraction, oil and gas development, fishing, tourism, marine shipping, infrastructure development, and environmental and cultural protection issues up for debate. Alaska must be involved in all issues affecting the future of the Arctic. In order to better understand and provide policy leadership on these issues, the legislature created the Northern Waters Task Force. The task force also believes that successful communication, sharing information and obtaining local input will only enhance the economic development opportunities of the Northern region.

The Northern Waters Task Force is comprised of legislators, leaders from Arctic communities, and members representing key federal and state agencies. The members of the task force are Representative Reggie Joule, Chair; Senator Bert Stedman. Vice-Chair: Representative Bob Herron; Senator Lyman Hoffman; Dept. Environmental Conservation Commissioner Larry Hartig; North Slope Borough Mayor Edward Itta; Unalaska City Manager Chris Hladick; Nome Mayor Denise Michels; NANA Corp. Vice-President Chuck Green; and Alaska Marine Conservation Council Chair Dave Kubiak. Senator Donald Olson; Representative Bryce Edgmon; Richard Glenn from Arctic Slope Regional Corporation; and Cora Campbell, Commissioner of Fish and Game from the Governor's Office, serve as alternates. The task force must provide final recommendations to the Legislature by January 30. 2012.

The task force has convened and held initial meetings in Anchorage trict 39 roughly comprises Bering Straits Regional Corp. and Calista Corp. Native groups. The new District 39, as proposed, would hold Bering Strait, Tanana Chiefs and Ahtna groups.

In drawing the new districts, the board has been up against the law and federal Dept. of Justice review of the plan while trying to even up the districts. Because a measure to increase the districts was voted down, the board had to contend with a significant out-migration of people from rural Alaska. District populations have either stagnated or shrunk, while the state's total population increased, hence the need to shift dis-

The proposed area of District 39 makes it the largest district in the state. The configuration would yield a population of 16,892, bringing it within 4.52 percent of the target figure of 17,555 people. State and federal law allow a deviation of five percent more or less than a figure derived from dividing the state's total population by its number of House districts. The 2010 census found District 39 with 2,113 persons short of the ideal number, an illegal deviation of 11.9 percent.

District 39 currently runs roughly along the Bering Sea coast from Wales southward to include Hooper Bay and Chevak and goes east just between Unalakleet and Kaltag and southwest as far as Pilot Station. District 40 borders the current district and the new proposed district borders on the north. District 40, which contains Kotzebue, takes the top segment of the state up to the north coast along the Chukchi and Beaufort seas and the Arctic Ocean.

Districts 39 and 40 comprise Senate District T. If the new, expanded District 39 is adopted, Senate District T will cover the northern third of Alaska.

By law, the board will have to present its final redistricting plan on Tuesday, June 14. There will be a month or so filing litigation. The senate and house district maps will be in effect until the 2020 census figures are released.

City Council

City's budget, and was scheduled to meet in work session June 7. Two weeks ago, the City administration handed the Council a budget based on 16 mills of property tax for funding. Last week, the Council went along with Councilwoman Mary Knodel's red pencil and reduced the budget to 10 mills. The current budget is based on a rate of seven mills. What's a mill? A mill rate is the amount of tax paid per dollar of assessed property value. A mill is $1 of tax for each $1,000 of assessed value. A 20-mill rate budget would require the owner of a property assessed at $50,000 to pay $1,000 in tax for the year.

Additionally, on the topic of expenses for the next year, Handeland said the price of oil is still up. If the NJUS were to purchase oil at Monday's Platt Index price, the cost would have been around $3.65, including the price of oil plus tax and delivery. About the same time last year, the utility paid around $2.56 for oil plus tax and delivery, about a dollar and a dime less. NJUS' loading date is June 17 this year. The price will be based on an average during a time period from 15 days before lifting to 15 days after lifting, so the price of the fuel going into the NJUS generators will not be known until July 1, according to Handeland.

"We will try to absorb that in our operations," Handeland said.

The NJUS 2011 operations and maintenance budget has gone before the Council for first reading and will come up for final passage at the Council meeting June 13. The budget is based on estimated revenues of $13,616,628 and operating and maintenance expenses of $12,931,237, including provisions for a depreciation in the amount of $4,893,700, which results in a net margin of $685,391. Net margin and non-cash amortizations will fund the 2011 capital improvements budget, annual bond and debt service principal payments, fuel inventory and grant program local participation which are not a part of or included in the operation and maintenance

HCA boundary review

In addition to the NBRSA, the council created four Bering Sea habitat conservation areas in which bottom trawling is prohibited when Amendment 89 was adopted in 2007. One of these areas is the Nunivak Island-Etolin Straits-Kuskokwim Bay habitat conservation area (Nunivak HCA). The boundaries of the Nunivak HCA were developed in consultation with representatives of the fishing industry and the Association of Village Council Presidents. The council agreed to review the boundary line developed for the Nunivak HCA in four years and to consider whether further action is needed.

The council's review of the Nunivak HCA boundary is scheduled for Thursday afternoon prior to the review of the NBSRA research plan.

The council may choose to initiate analysis of a new boundary, take no action, or request additional information prior to taking action.

The council meeting began June 8 and is scheduled to continue through June 14 at the Mini-Convention Center. An initial BSAI chum salmon bycatch analysis is slated for Friday morning.

Future meetings on NBSRA

The AFSC will hold a community/subsistence workshop on Sept. 12 in Nome to gather input on subsistence use and other special areas to be excluded from bottom trawling, along with other concerns to be addressed in the NBSRA research plan. The council is scheduled to review a draft NBSRA research plan at its December meeting in Anchorage and to finalize the research plan at a meeting in April 2012 in Anchorage.

Triathlon results

Submitted by Kirsten Bey

Relatively warm temperatures, modest winds and just a light rain greeted the athletes in Nome's annual Stroke-n-Croak Triathlon as they climbed out of the pool and headed into the outdoor portions of the race. Seventeen participants swam, ran and/or biked the course, which consisted of a 1-mile swim, a 4-mile run, and an 8-mile bike ride.

The ages of participants ranged from 11 to 60-something years with several people completing all legs of the event in an individual effort and many working for a team effort. This event has been going on since the pool first opened, so it is one of Nome's long standing community events kicking off the summer months.

Thanks to all the athletes and volunteers providing logistics supports. Thanks to the City of Nome for maintaining such fine facilities as the pool and rec center. The proceeds from this event support the High School Swim Team – thanks to everyone.

Only the bold and fit of body swim the Bering Strait

By Anna Vernaya, director of Russian Cultural Center in Alaska Project coordinator

The expanse from Russia to Alaska is not great in distance. In ancient time animals and people moved freely between the continents. Unfortunately the modern barrier, politics, has bred distrust between our countries. But individuals overcome "unnatural" barriers to build intangible bridges of understanding and friendship in many venues, which, in the future, will pave the way for an actual international bridge

One category of pioneers building this "bridge" is not politicians, but outstanding athletes who ski, dog sled, kayak, hike and swim across the Bering Strait. Cultural and business contacts on both sides of the Bering Sea are also initiated by individuals, non-profits, trade/business organizations and artists seeing value in understanding each other, establishing economic ties, and learning from each other how to best promote the quality of life in our northern climates.

In 1987, at the time of Perestroika, a 30-year-old American woman, Lynne Cox, was the first person in recorded history to swim from the U.S. to Russia, swimming from America's Little Diomede Island to Russia's Big Diomede Island. The distance between the islands is 2.6 miles; Lynne swam it in 2 hours and 6 minutes, wearing only a swimming suit in water with a temperature of 43°F. She made the swim to celebrate and promote the new and improved relationship between our countries!

This summer between July 28 and August 3, weather permitting, an International relay team of 30 long distance athletes from seven countries, known as "Ice Swimmers," will swim 86 miles across the Bering Strait from Dezhenv Cape on the Chukchi Peninsula, Russia to Cape Prince of Wales. Participants in the relay swim will be accompanied by support ships with Russian and American doctors and medical personnel, as well as journalists and media of the participating countries' swimmers. The Far Eastern sea-going vessel Gipanis will accompany the marathon swimmers and is outfitted with all necessary rescue equipment.

The water temperature in the Strait in this timeframe is 39° to 46° F, the air temperature is 50° to 60°F, and the wind blows from 26 to 31

Athletes will wear bathing attire only; no wet suits or a cream or fat to protect their bodies from hypothermia for these "Polar Bear" swimmers! The swim will be performed as a relay: Each sportsman will swim a distance of a little over ½ mile each lap for 3 or 4 laps per day at a speed of at least 1.5 miles per hour. Relay heats are designed so that the swimmers, replacing each other, can sleep at least 8 hours. These swims will go down in history and be entered in the Guinness Book of Records.

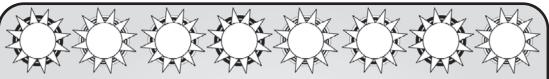

There is an immediate practical value to this marathon. According to UNESCO, about 250 people annually worldwide die from hypothermia. Therefore, if we apply the techniques of athletes, doctors and scientists studying the psychological and physiological features of the human body in extreme situations will learn how to reduce the number of victims succumbing to hypothermia

The swim will celebrate the 365th anniversary of the Bering Strait expedition by Simeon Dezhnev; the 270th anniversary of the expedition of Vitus Bering, who was the pioneer of Russian Alaska; and the 70th anniversary year of the Lend-Lease Agreement for the supply of aircraft and provisions to the USSR during World War II. Because the Bering Strait was a bridge for the allies during WWII, after the Cold War, this strait was symbolically named "Friendship Bridge" between Russia and America and is particularly important to maintain and grow for both Alaskans and the eastern Russian providences.

Many people, organizations and government agencies are now involved in various aspects of this relay swim by international athletes. The swim was conceived at a meeting between the head of the Amur Federation Akvais-Sport Federation, Alexander Brylin, and Artur Chilingarov, a famous polar explorer and Vice-Speaker of the Russian State Duma. Helping with organizational details is Andrey Kuznetsov, President of "Harmony", an international organization promoting world understanding through sports, recreation and tourism. "Harmony" is headquartered in Washington, D.C. Brylin and Kuznetsov recently visited Alaska to inform the State of Alaska and the City of Nome about the swimming event and arrange border and rescue services to render assistance to the athletes after a marathon if necessary

By swimming the Bering Strait, the strongest long-distance, powerful and courageous ice water swimmers from Great Britain, the USA, Canada, China, Dominican Republic, Czech Republic, Latvia and Russia will become ambassadors of goodwill. We must admire these strong willed, bold, dedicated swimmers! You may even want to consider being in Nome to welcome them as they come ashore.

Spic and span, Nome sparkles after citywide cleanup

The streets of Nome are looking a lot cleaner this week. The 14th annual citywide cleanup campaign brought out Nomeites in full force armed with yellow plastic bags. Cleanup is a must do event. Merilee Murdock rushed back from her East Coast vacation, jumped off the jet and headed straight to the recycle station to help Girl Scout Troop 61 collect trash donations.

The Nome Boy Scouts did a spectacular job collecting 100 big yellow trash bags along the highway near Martinsonville. Other Nome civic groups took part in the project.

Candace Weidler from the Nome city manager's office reports that 15 junked vehicles were hauled away, 21 refrigerators and freezers bid farewell

When all was finished, 400 hot dogs had been consumed along with soda and water to make the event a fun occasion and Nome looking good.

E-wastes recycled

By Rachael Bauman

Teamwork, hard work and dusty work paid off last weekend as the City of Nome, Nome Eskimo Community and Kawerak, Inc. joined forces to recycle the city's hazardous electronic-waste. Volunteers and representatives of these organizations gathered together to collect any potentially hazardous materials and recyclable electronics. Items ranging from computers to TVs and even microwaves were palletized and shipped to Total Reclaim, a recycling company based out of Seattle, WA. The truckloads of e-waste from local businesses and Nome residents were an encouraging sight to see. High hopes to continue this recycling

Nutrition plate has replaced the food pyramid

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

The food pyramid is becoming an icon of the past. The well-known stack of foods depicting items in recommended portions apparently did nothing for changing our eating patterns

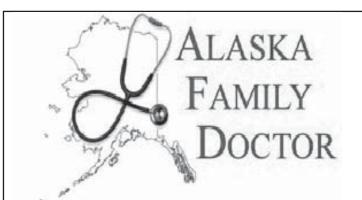

Therefore, last week First Lady Michelle Obama and Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack announced that the pyramid is being replaced with a plate intended to show the best portions of vegetables, fruits, grains, protein and dairy.

According to a U.S. Department of Agriculture press release, the new icon is called MyPlate. "It is a new generation icon with the intent to prompt consumers to think about building a healthy plate at meal times."

The First Lady unveiled MyPlate in response to a 2010 Child Obesity

Task Force report, which noted that simple, actionable advice for consumers is needed.

"This is a quick, simple reminder for all of us to be more mindful of the the country," said the First Lady.
"When mom or dad comes home from a long day of work, we're already asked to be a chef, a referee, a cleaning crew. So it's tough to be a foods that we're eating and as a mom, I can already tell how much this is going to help parents across nutritionist, too. But we do have time to take a look at our kids' plates. As long as they're half full of fruits and vegetables, and paired with lean proteins, whole grains and low-fat dairy, we're golden. That's how easy it is."

"With so many food options available to consumers, it is often difficult to determine the best foods to put on our plates when building a healthy meal," said Secretary Vilsack. "My-Plate is an uncomplicated symbol to help remind people to think about their food choices in order to lead healthier lifestyles."

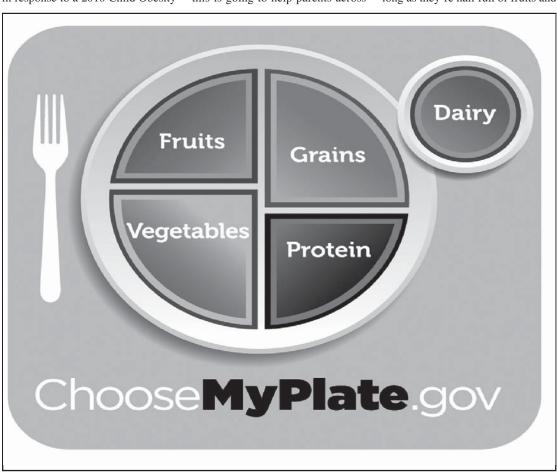

ChooseMyPlate.gov, a website produced by the USDA, shows individuals and health professionals how to build healthy meals using the MyPlate icon. A quick click on any portion of the MyPlate icon brings up examples of foods within each

As a physician, I am impressed with the intuitive design of the new food icon. Nutritionists will appreciate the increased emphasis on vegetables and will also note that candy, sweets, and soda (pop) are overtly absent

To determine if the new design connects with kids, the target audience, I showed my own elementary school-age girls a series of pictures. First I showed them the original food pyramid, introduced in 1992, which was followed by a picture of MyPyramid, a 2005 update to the classic pyramid. Finally, I showed a picture the new MyPlate. I asked, "Which one helps you know what to eat to be healthy?"

Immediately they connected with the new icon, saying, "The plate is a lot better than the other ones because it shows you what to eat."

agencies, local municipalities, tribal entities and federal government."

Unfortunately, it appears the ACMP will sunset unless either Governor Parnell or the Legislature calls for another special session. It is unlikely the governor will call the Legislature back into special session to resuscitate the program. According to law, the governor must provide at least 30 days notice to the Legislature before such a session can begin, and that 30 days notice deadline has already passed. The Legislature, however, still has time to act and can call itself into special session. At this point, we haven't seen any signs that will happen.

Although there are several assumptions about the negative impacts to Alaska regarding the demise of the ACMP, I'd like to mention that those are still only speculation. Legislators may consider reintroducing the bill next session, but a statement by the administration says it is estimated that it may take three years to develop a new program. While reintroducing the ACMP in the future may be inefficient and wasteful, this may be the opportunity to completely scrub the program and reimplement it to better serve all Alaskans.

Perhaps this will be a learning experience for us to realize we need to work together for the best interest of all Alaskans rather than letting the differences in personal politics prevent us from reaching a fair settlement for the state we serve. At this point, I can only hope that if the ACMP dissolves, the federal government will do a better job and is willing to work closely with coastal Alaskans when it comes to resource development.

Impacts from loss of the Alaska Coastal Management Program

- 1) Loss of the state's most powerful tool to influence federal decisionmaking. This will give the feds greater say about what happens with Alaska's resources.
- 2) Loss of coordinated, streamlined permitting, resulting in permitting delays and greater bureaucratic red tape. Developers will lose a single point of contact for the State's review of their proposals, decreasing efficiency and increasing frustration.
- 3) Loss of the requirement that offshore oil and gas developers adhere to the state's strict oil spill prevention requirements.
- 4) Loss of local input and knowledge into state decision-making. This may encourage some Alaskans to resort to costly and disruptive litigation to ensure their concerns are addressed by developers.
- 5) Loss of federal funding for state and local planning efforts. To date, the federal government has invested more than $151 million in the

ACMP. Alaska's share of coastal management funds would go to other

6) Potential inability to receive additional federal revenue sharing from offshore oil and gas development. Several bills now before Congress would allow for OCS revenue sharing only for states with an approved coastal plan.

7) Inability to receive federal approval of a deepwater port in the Arctic at a time when the state is working hard to ramp up oil and gas development in the outer continental shelf off Alaska. The legislature just put $972,000 in the capital budget to identify and map potential deepwater Arctic ports. Federal deep water port approval is limited to states with coastal management plans.

8) Could undermine Obama Administration and congressional support for opening oil and gas development in the Arctic. Loss of the ACMP provides ammunition for opponents to argue that Alaska doesn't have responsible coastal safeguards in place. If the ACMP goes away, Alaska would soon be the only state of 35 eligible states that does not par-

9) Inability to receive grants under the federal Coastal and Estuarine Land Conservation Program, which will distribute $20 million in 2011, including money for a project on Campbell Creek in Anchorage.

10) Loss of a vital tool for balancing economic development with management of resources valued highly by Alaskans along our 34,000 miles of coastline.

11) Loss of 34 state jobs and many other jobs in local governments. The program currently provides more than $700,000 to 28 local coastal governments to enable them to par-

Public comment period opens on Chukchi Sea drilling

The federal government plans to hold public hearings in Alaska communities after releasing its latest report on oil and gas development in a portion of the Chukchi Sea, which includes a look at the impact of a big oil spill beneath ice.

The public can comment in person on the revised draft supplemental environmental impact statement for drilling in Lease Sale 193, a huge area outside Northwest Alaska that extends off the coasts between Point Hope and Barrow.

The revised draft was completed recently. The update followed a July 2010 order from the federal district court in Alaska that the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management add more information to its original review, including on the impact of natural gas development.

Following up on 150,000 public comments and increased pressure after the blowout of the Deepwater Horizon in the Gulf of Mexico, the agency in the revised draft also addresses the impact of a hypothetical well blowout and huge oil spill in Arctic waters

The agency formerly called Minerals Management Service published the original environmental impact statement in May 2007. It then held a lease sale, taking in $2.6 billion from oil and gas production companies.

But the effort got hung up after the Native Village of Point Hope and other Native and environmental groups sued the federal government and won.

To see the draft EIS and background documents, www.alaska.boemre.gov [http://www.alaska.boemre.gov].

The meetings will start at 7 p.m. and are set for:

- · Kotzebue on Tuesday, June 21, at the community center.
- Point Hope on Wednesday, June 22, at the city Qalgi center.
- Point Lay on Thursday, June 23, at the community center.

Wainwright on Friday, June 24, at the Robert James community cen-

- Barrow on Monday, June 27, at the Inupiat Heritage Center.
- Anchorage on Wednesday, June 29, at the Wilda Marston Theater.

The public can also submit comments in an envelope labeled "Comments on Revised Draft SEIS, Lease Sale 193 Chukchi Sea." They can be sent to the Regional Director, Bureau of Ocean Energy Management, Regulation and Enforcement, Alaska OCS Region, 3801 Centerpoint Drive, Suite 500, Anchorage, Alaska 99503-5820.

People can also submit comments in writing or electronically until July 11. To submit written comments, you can also go to www.regulations.gov [http://www.regulations.gov] and type in Lease Sale 193 in the keyword entry.

Community Service Commis-

Governor Parnell recently appointed Barbara Nickels to the Community Service Commission. The commission prepares a national service plan that develops a state system for recruiting and placing participants into service programs as well as providing outreach to communitybased agencies that serve under-represented populations.

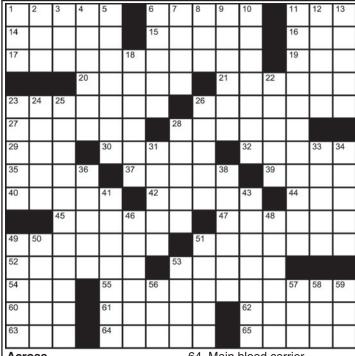

Barb Nickels, of Nome, is the director of the Nome Chamber of Commerce Meetings and Conventions Division. She also served as the president and CEO of Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation Education Foundation. Active in the Nome community, Nickels is a past president and current member of the Nome School Board, the Nome Preschool Association, and the Nome

Parent Teacher Student Association. Additionally, she was a past supervisor of the AmeriCorps VISTA program in Nome, and served as director of the Alaska Regional Development Organization. Nickels, who is appointed to a seat reserved for members of a community-based organization, is also a founding member of the Alaska Partnership for Economic Development. Congratulations to Barb Nickels on her recent appointment.

Marie Rowe

Marie Rowe, mother of Jim Rowe of Nome, died peacefully at 10:30 a.m. May 5.

Marie had a great life and was going strong until the last two weeks following a mild stoke on April 16. At first the stroke seemed to have mainly affected her tremendous memory. However, after another week or so her body just started to shut down. She had celebrated a wonderful 100th birthday on December 23, 2010 with over 100 folks stopping by 204 Arlington, Harbor Springs, MI, her home for 60 years, to share in the occasion.

The lifespan from 1910 to present is a story she loved to tell. Through hard times and joyous she embraced life with an uncompromising spirit of goodness, support and generosity.

Her wit, sense of humor and the ever-present positive outlook on all things influenced a great many friends and acquaintances. For someone who was at the opposite end of the spectrum of a social butterfly she nevertheless had more genuine friends than many folks. She truly loved people and they loved her back. Her door and her heart were always open.

Although she was ready for this next adventure, she will be truly missed by many.

A Celebration of Life featuring special music and remembrances will take place June 18 at the Harbor Springs Presbyterian Church at 11 a.m. A reception with slide show will follow in the reception hall. All are welcome.

Ida Leah Murray

Ida Leah Murray was born on May 22, 1952 in Elim to Paul and Josephine Nagaruk. She died May 26, 2011 at 5:45 p.m. after a short bout with cancer and a massive stroke.

Ida and her brother Fred lived with her aunt Jennie Bradley while her mother was hospitalized at Mt. Edgecumbe Hospital and called her "mom."

Ida attended Elim Day School, then went to William E. Beltz High School where she graduated as a salutatorian. After graduating from high school she went on to the Alaska Methodist University in Anchorage where she studied nursing.

As a baby Ida called Joe "Seetah" because she couldn't say sweetheart. Joe and Ida were later married on December 31,1973 and were married for 37 years. Together they were blessed with three children Janelle, Jeffrey and Charles, who they call "Freddy." They were also blessed with three grandchildren Isabel Murray, Searaya and Yowah Saccheus.

Ida was employed in her first job as mail clerk for Alyeska Pipeline and was immediately promoted to Accounting Clerk I and on to Accounting Clerk III. After moving home, Ida taught Sunday school in the late 1970s and early 80s. She also taught Adult Basic Education where she was proud to have many acquire their G.E.D. After discovering that she loved to teach, she went back to Alaska Pacific University where she acquired her baccalaureate degree in Education and she was employed with the Bering Strait School District as an Elementary Teacher for 23 years.

Ida loved to sing and praise God at the Elim Covenant Church, at home and in the country. She served as a board member on the Elim Covenant Church, KICY and City of Elim. She loved to bake and could make a table full of pies in a little while and pick berries. She liked to go boating, fishing, hunting and to be with family and friends.

Ida is survived by her sisters Esther (Albert) Kimoktoak, Edna (John) Purcell, Hannah (Lynn) Takak, Lillian and Hugh Keith, Maggie and Milton Cross and Judy and John Jaworski and her brothers Luther and Jerri Nagaruk, Sheldon and Emily and Rodney Nagaruk, sister-in-law Carolyn Bradley, Christina Perrigo, along with numerous nieces and nephews.

She is also survived by her husband Joe, daughter Janelle and companion Charles Saccheus Jr., Jeffrey and Freddy, and her three grandchildren, Isabel, Searaya and Yowah, also brothers-in-law Frederick and Emily Murray, Michael and Christine and sister-in-law Ellen and Maurice Ivanoff.

Ida was preceded in death by parents Paul and Josephine Nagaruk, Elizabeth Nagaruk, Ambrose, Gerald and Helen Towarak, Ruby Jane Nagaruk, Frederick Bradley, Nathan Nagaruk, Irene and Walter Kavairlook, Albert Kimoktoak, Lynn Takak, John Purcell, nephew Floyd Nagaruk, father-in-law Joseph Murray Sr. and mother-in-law Flora Hansen. She will be greatly missed by all who knew her.

Thank you!

The family of Joseph Murray, Jr. thanks Pastor Donald Cross for officiating in the loss of Ida L. Murray, who was a wonderful loving Wife, mother, Aunt, cousin, & friend and especially an educator who loved and befriended everyone she got in contact with. We will all miss her dearly. We would also like to thank everyone for their prayers during her struggle with cancer at the hospital in Anchorage during 2 weeks in mid-February and her hospitalization during March 27 through May 21, 2011, after suffering a severe stroke in which she could not re-gain her strength to continue her chemo-therapy in April and May.

Ida succumbed peacefully in her home on May 26 at Elim. We thank all the doctors, nurses and all who cared for her during her stay at the ANMC and the Alaska Regional Hospital, especially thanks to nurse Sadie for helping us as we prepared and arranged to bring Ida home on May 21 for her birthday which was May 22. I truly believe that was her final wish to be home with her 2 sons, one daughter and 3 grandchildren and myself on her birthday.

We thank the Norton Sound Hospital for your kind gesture and to the hostel for using a room till her flight departure home. I especially thank Sonja and Bobby Simpson, Ruth Daniels, Nick Schollmeire, Virginia and Chuck Degnan and my one and only sister Ellen Ivanoff and the Alaska Federation of Natives for your generous support that is greatly appreciated. We thank Kay Hansen, Chris Perrigo, Edna Apatiki and George Anungazuk for your help and support. We thank Carol and Paul Nagaruk, Darlene Katchatag and Fred Daniels in making the cross, preparing and serving at the potluck and making a final resting place for Ida.

Also, thanks to Isaiah Woods for generating the DVD. Thank you Milt and Maggie for your house and your car. Thank you to Bering Strait School District for the use of their facilities. Thanks Bering Air. We also thank all the relatives and friends of Ida who came and sang beautiful songs, sent beautiful flowers and for their final thoughts and prayers. Thank you to Tyler Ivanoff and Fred Nagaruk for being the ushers, and thanks to all the pallbearers who carried Ida to her final resting place by her Mom and Pop. GOD bless you all, Quyanna, from Joseph Murray, Jr. and family.

Even though it is impossible to calculate exactly how many Norton Sound chum salmon Area M salmon fishermen and pollock trawlers take, it is safe to assume that their harvests are having an impact, and reducing that mortality is a necessary step in restoring local salmon returns.

This is not the first time the food resources depended upon by people living in this region have been depleted by a big commercial fishing industry from far away. During the 1800s the developed world ran on whale oil. The whaling companies were the oil companies of the day; making immense profits catching whales and rendering whale oil on their factory ships much as the factory trawlers catch and process pollock today. In U.S. waters, commercial marine mammal harvests have been managed as "fisheries" by the same agencies that manage the pollock trawl fisheries.

In 1848, the Yankee whalers discovered an abundance of whales in the Arctic Ocean and the whale fleet rushed north to hunt those whales. When arctic whaling ended in the 1920s, the whales had been nearly hunted to extinction. That part of the story is well known, but what is less well known is the depletion of the Pacific walrus populations incidental to the whale harvest and the catastrophic impact that had on the Bering Strait communities.

Each summer, while waiting for the sea ice to open up and allow access to the whaling grounds, the whalers whiled away their time hunting walruses along the ice edge and processing their blubber for oil which was as valuable as or more so than whale oil.

At first, the walruses were not afraid of people and easy to kill; the whalers slaughtered them by the thousands and fed their blubber into the try pots. At the end of the 19th century walrus populations had become so depleted by overhunting that the people living in walrus dependent native communities around the Bering Strait region were starving

Wiping out the walrus herds was an unintended consequence of the whaling industry. No one decided that it would be a good thing to do; it just happened. What's more important is that nobody stopped it before it was too late for the people who needed those walruses for survival and their communities were devastated. It's sad to say but most of the whalers didn't give a damn about the collateral damage caused by their industry

The consequences of the destruction of western Alaska salmon stocks today are not quite as dramatic as they were when the whalers extirpated the walrus herds a century ago. Imported groceries and social welfare programs pretty much ensure that few people die of starvation anymore; nevertheless, the human costs of salmon depletion are consequential for the people who rely on fish.

In the 40 years I have been working with fish and wildlife in western Alaska, I've seen a tragic disintegration of the local salmon harvesting and processing culture and economy that once flourished. The fish camps where families once stayed during the summer, catching, cutting and processing salmon are mostly abandoned today. Many of the fish racks have rotted and fallen down and the ones that are still standing hold only a fraction of the numbers of dried fish they held in the past.

People think of chum salmon as a low value fish, and it is if all you do is sell it in the round on the international wholesale market. The foods produced at these camps are value added products that are nutritious, good for you and keep without refrigeration for a long time. The processed foods that people have to buy in the stores to replace salmon is generally not nearly as healthy and costs a lot of money in an area where cash is hard to come by.

Commercial salmon fishing formerly provided western Alaskans the money for acquiring and maintaining the equipment needed for other subsistence hunting and gathering activities as well as cash to cover living expenses and a few luxuries. Today, commercial fishermen barely break even at a time when it is becoming increasingly expensive to live in the bush.

Reducing bycatch meaningfully in the pollock fisheries will cost the trawlers a significant amount of money. It's easy to enter those costs on a spreadsheet. The economic and cultural costs for the residents of western Alaska of not reducing salmon bycatch is not quite so easy to quantify, but that must not be used as an excuse to avoid recognizing the true costs. Those costs are high.

More than 100 years ago, the whaling industry thoughtlessly destroyed the walrus herds that had sustained the people living in the Bering Strait for thousands of years. Times have changed; congress has adopted national standards to protect communities from the negative impacts of commercial fisheries by-catch, and the North Pacific Fishery Management Council is obligated to comply with those standards in regulating the pollock trawl industry. The Alaska Constitution requires the State of Alaska to manage fish resources for sustained yield, and no one can argue credibly that driving western Alaska salmon stocks to extinction is sustained yield.

I hope to see a good turnout of local salmon users prepared to tell the council how chum salmon shortages have affected people in western Alaska so that they can come up with effective ways to reduce those impacts in the future.

Savoonga celebrates Memorial Day

By Elouise Hawkes

People in Savoonga turned out in large numbers to honor and pay tribute to those who served and protected their country.

Veterans carried the flags as they made their way from the post office to the cemetery. Other marchers also carried flags. Some rode 4-wheelers, some walked, and some rode bicycles. John Waghiyi gave an outstanding speech honoring those who have served and died and recognizing Veterans who have served their country. An honorary wreath was placed. Family and friends placed wreaths as well.

Following the ceremonies, refreshments were served in the school MPR, followed by a Pinewood Derby competition in the gym.

Council hikes property tax by 71 percent

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Common Council introduced five City budgets into first reading June 13-spending plans from general funds ($9.97 million), capital projects funds ($2.15 million), special revenue funds ($164,000) Port of Nome funds ($1.967 million), and construction capital funds ($818,000).

At the beginning of deliberations on general fund budget in recent weeks, the City's administration handed the Council a budget based on a 16 mill rate for starters. Oh no, Councilwoman Mary Knodel told the panel at a recent work session. Knodel's cuts reduced the budget to 10 mills. Last week, the Council made further cuts in a work session. At the June 13 regular Council meeting, the Council boosted the budget back onto a base of 12 mills and set the mill rate at 12 mills. The amount raised to meet City costs from ten mills was just too lean to support the FY-12 budget, they said. The mill rate has to be set by June 15.

Councilman Stan Anderson began the raise with an amendment kicking the mill rate up to 11 mills. That gesture died without a second to the motion. Councilman Gerald Brown then made a motion to bump the rate to 12 mills. The motion for that amendment passed unanimously. Then the Council voted unanimously to set the 12-mill rate in concrete. The City budgets, including the general fund budget, will come up for public hearing and final passage on June 27.

"I am uncomfortable with a budget at 11 mills. At 11 mills it is scraped," Brown said. He observed that the City had needed to get into savings to the tune of $2 million last year, and with a budget based on too low a mill rate, the dip into reserves would be deeper, that it would be "irresponsible" to put it below 12 mills.

NPFMC decides chum salmon bycatch study needs more work

By Laurie McNicholas

The North Pacific Fishery Management Council has unanimously adopted a motion by Commissioner Cora Campbell, Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game asking staff to revise an analysis of alternatives to address chum salmon bycatch in the Bering Sea pollock fishery and bring it back to the council for initial review. The action came last Saturday after the council heard evaluations of alternatives for reducing chum bycatch by staff, committee reports and public testimony at the Mini Convention Center in Nome.

The council became concerned about chum salmon bycatch in the Bering Sea pollock fishery when it spiked to 440,459 fish in 2004, 704,586 in 2005, and 309,644 in 2006—a total of 1.45 million chums in three years. Chum bycatch has fluctuated in recent years from 93,786 fish in 2007 to 13,306 in

Salmon are prohibited species in the pollock fishery, but vessels towing large trawl nets incidentally catch salmon along with pollock. By law, bycatch is counted but cannot be sold. Most of the chum salmon taken as incidental catches in the large trawl nets used by pollock vessels are dead when they are brought on board and are returned to the sea.

That seems a horrifying waste to a majority of those who testified on chum salmon bycatch at last week's council meeting. They came from communities in the Bering Strait, Yukon River and Kuskokwim areas to represent the interests of their families and tribes by telling the council personal stories to show how important chum salmon is to them. They have valued chum salmon as food all their lives, and they value catching, cutting, drying and sharing chum as activities that hold their families together and nurture their communities.

Dear Nancy,

I take this opportunity of my "freedom" of speech to laud all your graduates of Bering Straits School District and beyond.

Congratulations on 12 short years of doing your homework. Many of you have chosen to go on to broaden your minds. I will tell you that you will not quit until your dreams are fulfilled.

Some of you will become leaders. doctors, presidents and the list goes on. Your parents brought you into the world along with the Holy Spirit's help. In your vocabulary there should not and will not be the phrase I can't.

I commend you graduates who have chosen to be drug and alcohol free. What a choice! Keep it up! Thanks to my Godly mother's prayers on a daily basis. Without our mothers' prayerful petitions on a daily basis, where would some of us

We can see Canada and Russia

The Redistricting Board, which determines the boundaries of our legislative districts must have been holding its meetings in a crack house. How could they possibly have come up with such an addled map to represent our region in Juneau? While we hear that some Anchorage area representatives are upset with the way their districts have been finagled, they can't hold a candle to the shape we are in. Wow, we can see Canada and Russia from our proposed district.

While the Redistricting plans are not yet final, time is running out. The first plans for this area were tolerable with some fine-tuning along the current boundaries. Now a snake has been let loose and they are talking about making District 39 (Foster) extend to the Canadian border and be the largest district in the state; while the Senate District T would cover the northern third of the state. Districts this large are absurd. It would take at least five hours by chartered plane to go from one end to the other. Of course we know there are no roads, but does the Redistricting Board understand the problem? To get from one end to the other by commercial plane from Nome, one would have to fly to Anchorage and then to Fairbanks and then by air taxi. The cost is prohibitive.

One can only speculate that such a plan is a collusive effort by urban politicians to further muffle the voice of rural Alaskans. (Remember that the legislature voted down a plan to increase the number of districts?) This convoluted district plan is without a doubt the most outstanding example in the history of gerrymandering. This plan makes it impossible to meet with legislators or constituents. It disenfranchises bush Alaskans and lumps communities and ethnic groups with no close ties or similarities into the same pot. This plan has to go away. Common sense does not seem to rule. Perhaps the court has to intervene. Bush Alaska needs more representation, not less.

Dear Editor,

My name is Andrew Ningealook, Jr. I'm from Shishmaref. Right now I'm currently housed at the Seaside Center. I'm writing this letter on behalf of the residents and myself here at Seaside Center. This place is housing us like animals. I would like to begin by our vacuums breaking down for about three weeks now and our living area is filthy. Then our dryers are out of service for about two weeks now. There are people that work who need clean clothes.

This place didn't give us proper clotheslines to dry our clothes. I see a lot of residents here drying their clothes on sewage line and in the bathroom that is unsanitary because there are some residents who had cuts here. We can smell the mildew that is building up in our living area;, where we are locked down, constantly punished for othermistakes.

The staff here is unprofessional, swearing and putting the residents down, making us feel like we are lower than standards, plus this place is making their own rules as they go along. This is GeoCare, not Cornell. We have Cornell handbooks that don't apply because they say we are run by GeoCare. We don't have GeoCare handbooks for our instructions to read. The furloughs case manager here is very incompetent when it comes to our care. The case manager sleeps on the job, rarely getting our paperwork done. If we confront the case manager, our paperwork and passes get lost or de-

I think the community should know what is going on here because we are part of the community too. The community comes and gets a lot of residents to go help set up for activities and events. We are here to be rehabilitated back into the community but we are being treated worse than prisoners.

Writing this will probably result in me getting punished. I, myself, have the right just like everyone else, to Freedom of Speech without repercussion.

Andrew Ningealook Jr. Seaside Center Nome, AK 99762 P.S. Anyone who is concerned about our well being can come down and visit or call me at 443-

Missing Iditarod musher found alive

Talkeetna musher Melanie Gould was found hungry, cold and tired, but safe near Cantwell last Saturday, after having been missing since May 31. Friends of Gould became concerned when the musher left her 12 dogs behind and seemingly disappeared from Talkeetna. For three days, troopers, SAR groups with K-9 units, planes and helicopters searched the area around Cantwell and the Denali Highway, where her truck was found parked on an old logging road. Troopers called off the search on Thursday. On Saturday troopers said that Melanie Gould made contact with them in Cantwell. A Talkeetna radio station reports that Gould was found by a search party made up of friends who continued looking for her after troopers called off their search. Gould was transported to Mat-Su Regional Hospital for a health check. Troopers decline any further comment as to Gould's reasons to disappear and why she was hiding from searchers.

District boundary changes force new Senate elections

Out of the 20 State Senators, 19 will have to run for election again next year, although their terms might not be up. The reason for this is the substantial change of the state's legislative districts during the redistricting effort that followed the 2010 Census. The only Senator not up for election in 2012 is Juneau's Dennis Egan because his district remained largely intact.

Kuskokwim declared major disaster

work and to fix and replace buildings that were damaged in the flood. Governor Sean Parnell had requested a federal disaster declaration from the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

Half of the homes in Crooked Creek were destroyed or damaged. On May 18, Governor Parnell declared a State Declaration of Disaster Emergency and activated state disaster assistance programs. A federal disaster declaration means that 75 percent of the disaster costs for repairing eligible public infrastructure and individual damages in the community will be covered by the federal government, while the remaining 25 percent will be paid by the state.

AFN launches marketplace competition

The Alaska Federation of Natives launched their annual marketplace competition. The competition awards cash to business and non-profit ideas that have the potential to help rural Alaska and foster economic development. This year's competition includes an essay component. The deadline is August 1, 2011. This is the fifth round of Alaska Marketplace and this year participants are asked to submit an essay or a business or nonprofit proposal under the competition theme "Planting Seeds of Change." The winners will be awarded the cash investments during the AFN convention in Anchorage in October 2011.

Governor supports Congressman's effort to develop

Congressman Doc Hastings (R-WA) visited Alaska last week and went on a tour with Governor Sean Parnell and Congressman Don Young to take a peak at the National Petroleum Reserve A. Hastings, the House Natural Resources Committee Chairman, had drafted The National Petroleum Reserve Alaska Access Act, which Parnell hails as legislation that reduces "bureaucratic red tape" and to "unlock the potential of energy resources" in the NPR-A.

Gold miner's death under investigation

Police are withholding the identity of a man who died while mining underwater for gold in shallow water off West Beach.

Nome Police Department Chief

John Papasodora confirmed Monday that personnel responded to the scene 1.5 miles down the shore near the western city limits Saturday evening ration announced late Tuesday afternoon that current CEO and president Carol Piscoya tendered her resignation effective July 29. Piscoya has been NSHC's president and CEO for two years.

Prior to her leadership role she was the vice president of the corporation's Community Health Services. He did say Monday the remains had been sent to Anchorage for autopsy to determine the cause of death. Papasodora expected to have more information within the week. Mining acquaintances said the de-

Tundra fire put out

A human-caused tundra fire near mile 18 of the Nome-Council Highway east of Cape Nome burned a couple acres. According to Nome Volunteer Fire Department fire fighter Jerry Steiger, no structures burned, and NVFD personnel responded and managed to put the blaze out. Steiger said the fire came within 25 and 50 feet of camp structures.

Councilman Pomeranz agreed.

"I was an advocate for a lower mill rate, but we have dipped into savings more than I thought," Pomeranz said.

Stick to the budget

Knodel said she could go along with 12 mills if spending stayed at 12 mills.

"My only concern is that if it is 12 mills, you are going to spend at 14 mills. The Council did not add back the cuts in staff and services with the 2-mill adjustment. The Council shook the City's piggy bank for $2 million last year and $2.5 million for FY-12 to keep the mill rate from going higher, Knodel said Tuesday.

Andersen brought up the cost of salaries, pointing out that Nome Joint Utility System employees had received three raises of 3 percent each over three years, and that City of Nome union employees' salaries would be negotiated toward year's end. Non-union employees and personal contract employees have a similar raise penciled in with the FY-12 budget.

Andersen asked for a list of contract employee salaries at a recent work session. At Monday's meeting, he got his wish. City staff included a list of salaries complete with retirement costs, insurance, and items that usually come out of a paycheck paid by the City for employees. City employees' wages and benefits, combined, come to almost $5 million for just a few over 40 employees, including part-time employees. Council packets included the 18-page salary record showing current salaries and increased salaries. The packets for the public did not contain the salary lists. With persuasion, the City staff complied with state laws on open records and made the list available at 25 cents per page.

Harbormaster pay wins

The salary list, effective July 1, 2012, shows the port director, hired by the city manager, as the most highly paid of the public's employees at $50 per hour for a projected total of $62,000 for seven months' work with insurance paid for 12 months and 23 hours leave' accrual per month. Salary projected over a year would come to $106,286. A sampling of positions shows the following salaries excluding the benefits: city manager, $102,116; executive assistant, $55,704; finance director, $88,000; city clerk, $65,001; deputy clerk, $52,412; chief of police, $97,936; emergency services administrator, $54,680; building inspector/maintenance supervisor, $62,199; Nome Rec Center director, $78,446; pool manager, $53,368; museum director, $69,554; librarian, $60,186. The city manager hires and negotiates salary packages for the NRC director, the harbormaster, building inspector and executive assistant.

The budget doesn't even allow for employee raises in the offing, Andersen said, in pleading his case for 12 mills, and the City cannot expect to be able to back down pay increases to spare the budget.

Public gets say

The Council will hold a public hearing on the City budgets on June 22, before the next Council meeting when the budget will come up for a final vote.

"We're dipping into the public's pocket," Andersen said. "People can't really voice an opinion at second reading [and final passage].

A mill rate of 12 means a person with a residence assessed at $100,000 would owe $1,200 in property tax. Last year's mill rate of 7 would come to $700 on an assessed value of $100,000. These figures mean a property tax increase of 71

"The increase is for expenses that we cannot reduce—fuel, utilities, salaries and the like, Knodel said

In other business, the Council:

• Approved the Nome Joint Utility Systems operations and maintenance budget for $13.6 million and the NJUS capital budget for $905,000 for equipment replacement.

• Approved a resolution calling for foreclosures of properties for unpaid tax and turned down Knodel's suggestion that property tax foreclosures on tax liens be put back to the end of the summer to allow people to recover from a hard winter of fuel and electric costs. "Is there a reason it couldn't have it later, like Sept. 1?" Knodel asked. Josie Bahnke, city manager, suggested that out of a string of years of delinquency-five years 2006-2010 needing to be paid off, the City could drop 2010, probably the largest amount of arrears. Anderson was having no compromise. "You are penalizing people who pay on time. Let's all have a tax holiday!" he sputtered. Knodel cast the only "no" vote against starting foreclosure proceedings immediately for a grand total of $86,159.26 in property tax owed by about three dozen property owners.

· Approved a contract with Vanessa Musich for the position of city clerk and commended acting secretary Camille Ten Eyck for filling in for months during the search for a new clerk. Musich has worked for the Nome Police Dept. since October 2010. She has a bachelor's degree in mechanical engineering from University of Notre Dame, Her starting salary will be $65,000 with a raise of 3.8 percent after a year based on satisfactory performance, followed by discretionary annual raises of 3 percent.

the council that as a youngster, he had washed mold off his family's stash of two-year old dried chum because at the time, it was all there was to eat. Chum returns to rivers in the Nome area are notoriously low. Some speakers from villages outside the Bering Strait region also reported worrisomely low chum runs in their rivers. A number of rural western Alaskans asked the council to limit the number of chum the pollock fishers are allowed to take as bycatch to 30,000 a year, or at most 50,000, which is the lowest number the council's analysts are considering.

Campbell described the testimony as "excellent, compelling and heartfelt." She acknowledged the difficulties analysts face in attempting to quantify subsistence. Aware of the value western Alaska villagers place on salmon and their concern about low returns, she said she changed the set of alternatives, adding an option to protect chum runs from bycatch in June and July when a higher proportion of chum salmon are bound for coastal western Alaska.

The option Campbell added to alternatives for analysis would apply a hard cap (chum bycatch limit) to vessels participating in the directed pollock fishery during June and July, in aggregate. This hard cap, if exceeded, would require all vessels affected by the cap to stop fishing until August 1.

Campbell's motion included recommendations from the council's advisory panel, which requested analysis of a revised set of alternatives and revisions to the EA.

On Monday the council reportedly decided to allow staff to decide when to bring a revised version of the chum bycatch analysis to the council for initial review.

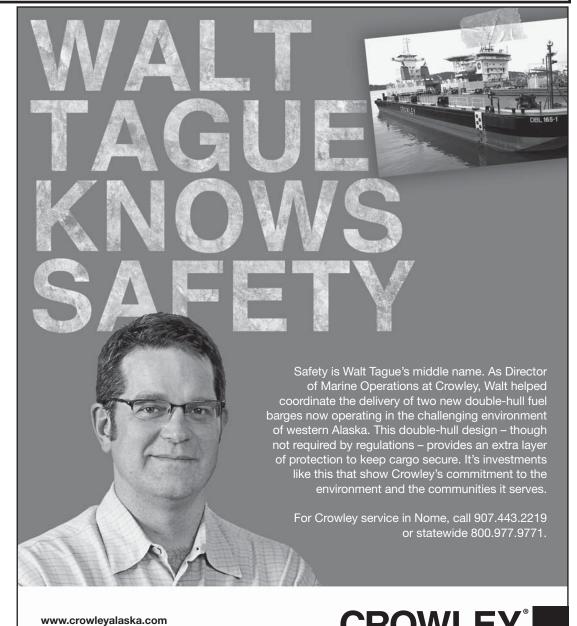

There is another side to this story. Last Friday the council spent the entire day listening to staff reports on the 414-page Bering Sea Non-Chinook Salmon Bycatch Management Initial Review Draft Environmental Assessment (EA) and its companion volume, the 295-page Regulatory Impact Review Initial Regulatory Flexibility Analysis (RIR). The documents were posted on the council's website May 17, about three weeks before the council convened its meeting on June 8 in Nome.

For those who believe just about everything can be represented and understood by numbers, spending seven hours listening to descriptions of the EA and RIR may have been gratifying. But some in the audience made heroic efforts to stay awake.

The staff reports on the AE and RIR are important, though. They indicate that the great majority of chums taken as bycatch in the pollock fishery aren't headed back to western Alaska rivers. Observers aboard pollock vessels in the Bering Sea collect samples of chums taken as bycatch for examination by geneticists and other scientists. Geneticists have identified six areas of origin for chum bycatch: East Asia; north Asia (Russia); coastal western Alaska (including all western Alaska systems except for the upper/middle Yukon); upper middle yukon;southwest Alaska (including river systems in Kodiak as well as north and south Peninsula stock); and Pacific Northwest (which includes river systems from Prince William Sound to Washington and

Geneticists say the majority of chums taken as bycatch in the Bering Sea pollock fishery are Asian fish. Other scientists use math and models to estimate how many fish in the bycatch are adults that would have returned to their rivers and areas of origin if they had not been swept up in nets along with pollock. Estimates of adult equivalency in the bycatch (AEQ) are among the estimates used to estimate the impact of chum bycatch on chum salmon stocks and communities that depend on them. The EA says on average, about 12 percent of AEQ in the chum bycatch is from coastal western Alaska.

The council also must consider the impacts on the pollock fishery for any action taken to reduce chum bycatch in the fishery. The action must be consistent with all 10 national standards in the Magnuson-Stevens Conservation and Management Act

The EA says the most relevant MSA standards for this action are national standards 1 and 9. National standard 1 requires that conservation and management measures prevent overfishing while achieving on a continuing basis the optimum yield for each fishery for the U.S. fishing industry. This standard applies to the Bering Sea pollock fishery, which produces roe (eggs), surimi and fillet products. The total value of pollock was estimated at $1.33 billion in 2008 and $1.030 billion in 2009.

National standard 9 requires that conservation and management measures shall, to the extent practicable, minimize bycatch; and to the extent bycatch cannot be avoided, minimize the mortality of such bycatch.

National standard 8 requires that conservation and management measures take into account the importance of fisheries resources to fishing communities to provide for sustained participation of, and minimize adverse impacts to, such communities (consistent with conservation requirements).

The problem statement developed by the council for the analysis includes this statement: "... The potential for high levels of chum salmon bycatch as well as long-term impacts of more moderate bycatch levels on conservation and abundance may have adverse impacts on fishery dependent communities.'

The council's proposed action to select an alternative to reduce chum bycatch in the pollock fishery requires an environmental review process under the National Environmental Policy Act. The EA and RIR are part of that process. Stephanie Madison, executive director of the At-Sea Processors Association warned the council that unless there is a finding of no significant impact for the EA when it is completed, an Environmental Impact Statement will be required. She said staff has not yet defined significance criteria in the document.

In an effort to prepare people in the Bering Strait region to formulate testimony on chum bycatch and other issues on the council's agenda, Kawerak, Inc. held a workshop in Nome on May 10, a week before the chum bycatch EA and RIR were posted on the council's website. Kawerak held a follow-up workshop at 6 p.m. May 9, the evening before the council heard daylong presentations on the chum bycatch EA and RIR by staff. Facilitating both workshops were Becca Robbins Gisclair, policy director, Yukon River Fisheries Association, and John Sky Starkey, attorney for the Association of Village Council Presidents.

Charlie Lean, fisheries research and development director for Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. told the council's Science and Statistical Committee on June 8 that he was one of four NSEDC staff designated to read the EA and RIR in five days. Noting that he had worked for the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game from 1981 to 2000, first as assistant area manager and subsequently as area manager for Norton Sound and Kotzebue, Lean said he later worked for five years for the Office of Subsistence Management. He told the SSC it took all of his brain to understand the huge chum bycatch analysis. He also indicated that the subsistence section of the analysis needs more work.

Lean said chum salmon runs began to decline in the Nome area in the 1970s, and commercial fishing was closed in 1985. "(The run) fell further, and subsistence fishermen decided it was not worth their time to go to camp and wait for an opening," he added. People had racks, boats, gear and cabins and they were no longer useful, so they moved to the Pilgrim River or White Mountain, and now subsistence activities occur at farther distances and at greater cost, he explained.

Lean said things got worse and a Tier II fishery based on a fisher's chum fishing history was established. "So to get a permit you had to be my age or older, and those older than I were physically unfit for the strenuous work," he added.

"It's been traumatic," Lean noted. "It's an understatement to say people in this region are sensitized to the decline in chum, and neighboring communities look at Nome and say that's not for us, so the fear is any impact to chum....

Minutes of the SSC meeting show the committee asked analysts to include a summary on alternative hypotheses for the declines of chum salmon in coastal western Alaska stocks, particularly in the Nome

Coverage of chum bycatch issues and other topics of regional interest discussed during last week's council meeting will continue next week in the Nugget.

READY—Mimi Farley, Emergency Services administrator, and Thomas Vaden, Nome Volunteer Ambulance Service, keep watch over various aspects of a multi-agency emergency response drill at Nome's harbor June 8.

By Sandra L. Medearis

Nome's emergency response volunteers held a multi-agency emergency response drill June 8.

The simulated emergency event involved a crisis with an imaginary cruise boat off the coast of Nome and involved the resources of crews from Nome Volunteer Ambulance, Nome Volunteer Fire Dept., Search and Rescue, Norton Sound Regional Hospital, Nome Police Dept. and Alaska State Troopers, according to Mimi Farley, Nome Emergency Services administrator.

DOT airport services provided a trailer with a rescue raft. JROTC youth served as casualties in the drill emergency.

"It was a simulated rescue in the case of a cruise ship emergency to show that we are prepared," Farley said. "The practice gave us ideas on how to prepare and coordinate services on the next drill to be ready for any actual emergency.

"This is a drill that the city manager required because we are having increased ship traffic," she said.

The NSEDC parking lot at the small boat harbor served as the site of the "cruise boat," NVFD member Jim West Jr. explained. The drill put the City of Nome's rescue boat Guardian into play.

"The idea was to deploy the boat and use our lifting gear to pick up survivors from the life raft and out of the water," West said. Nome Ambulance Service carried the "casualties" to the ER facility at Norton Sound Regional Hospital where there were personnel called in to handle the emergency.

Farley said the agencies held a valuable debriefing session on Thursday afternoon after the drill.

"We are tentatively planning another drill this fall," she said. "We have to plan ahead so we can hit all bases and be prepared for any emergency situation.'

Kelping: A social event in Norton Sound

Story and photos by Peggy Fagerstrom

Herring season is here and word was spreading in Unalakleet that a herring tender was on its way up to Norton Sound.

Just last week, boats were getting a last minute touch up, nets and gear were checked. After high-fiving friends and family, fishermen were yelling their last good-byes as the silver boats left Unalakleet one after the other for the herring harvest. The vessels' wakes were splitting open the calm waters of Norton Sound Bay, on their way to Cape Denby, Black Point, Tostoy or Klikatarik.

Not only fishermen get excited when herring arrive, so do the subsistence gatherers who are looking for herring eggs attached to kelp. This is known as kelping and presents an annual reason for a great social gathering of family and friends.

I have been told of this event for years and when an invitation was extended, I took the first plane from Nome to Unalakleet. After settling in at Bebucks Ivanoff's home, his wife Ann and their two children, nineyear-old Allie and six-year-old Alukka and I were off to the herring spawning grounds. In a canopy-covered boat named Silver Streak we made it there in a very short time. The ocean was calm as glass and its surface was occasionally interrupted by jumping fish, along with some seals and a pod of Minke whales. On the bluffs of Black Point were an abundance of seagulls sitting on their nests and snoozing in the warm sun.

We beached our boat on the back side of the point and walked to the top of a hill where we could see all the herring fishing boats and the huge tender. As we got back to the boat, the tide was just going out and the herring eggs began showing on the edges of the massive lava rocks.

There were eggs everywhere. The rocks had turned white, eggs stuck to kelp in layers as they hung on to the rocks, waving in the water. Some eggs were pulled up in clumps with a rake from the lower rocks and they looked like heads of cauliflower as they emerged from the water.

Allie and Alukka had rolled up their sleeves and helped fill the two bags before we left to visit the tender. As we approached the tender Dancer, there were boats from Elim, St. Michael, Stebbins, Shaktoolik and Nome tied to its sides, and the fisher- for the right time to set their nets. men were all visiting as they waited onboard their boat, the Abuz. They had a cup of chocolate with the captain, and there were many compliments aimed at him and the crew of Dancer, as the fishermen appreciated the hot soups, sandwiches and hot coffee served 24 hours a day.

We passed the Twin Islands and docked on the south side of Pancake Island where we made a fire and prepared to have lunch. Then the boats came, and all that I've been told over the years happened. People joined us, and the variety of food I doubt I will ever see again.

One of the many foods was the kelp, which we ate both raw and cooked. It has a creamy, delicate sealike flavor and a crunchy texture.

As the fire dwindled down, the children continued to cook strands of kelp over the coals and then ended up roasting s'mores with the same sticks

A nice siesta with a full tummy was not to happen as we had kelp to pick.

A few feet from where we ate our lunch, there was a 15 foot wide stretch of kelp — layers of kelp. Along the shallow shore, the water was teeming with herring, fighting for a spot to lay their eggs. The shores became full with people, men, women and children of all ages, as we raced to fill our bags before the tide brought the water back in.

Back in Unalakleet, the kelp was sorted, washed and placed in buckets with rock salt to be preserved for winter.

Decline in salmon runs linked to decline in health

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

The North Pacific Fishery Management Council met in Nome last week. Much of their work focused on the economic tension between the deep-sea pollock fishing industry, which has been shown to interfere with salmon migrating patterns, and local communities who depend on good salmon returns for food.

Many of the topics discussed would seem foreign, if not irrelevant to the average person. As I sat through a few of the sessions, however, it struck me that the decisions being made by this body would have a tremendous impact, not merely on the economics of the region, but on the very health of every person living in the Norton Sound.

Here is why. The people of the United States are in the midst of a cardiovascular disease epidemic. Unlike infectious disease epidemics that come and are quickly controlled, the current epidemic of cardiovascular disease is occurring in three destructive waves that so far do not recede, nor do they show any signs of doing so. The first wave is obesity, followed by a rise in Diabetes Mellitus, followed subsequently by an exponential rise in cardiovascular disease.

In the U.S., this tsunami was once a forecast; it is now a reality. Unless positive changes are made, within 10 years, 52 percent of the U.S. population will have diabetes or pre-diabetes (which is just diabetes in its earliest and most treatable form) at an estimated cost of over $13,000 per year per person afflicted. Once diagnosed, people will spend most of their spare time and money trying to prevent the dreaded complications of heart disease, stroke, kidney failure, and blindness.

In rural Alaska the statistics are even more alarming. Whereas the U.S. as a whole saw a 93 percent rise in the prevalence of diabetes mellitus between 1990 and 2006, the Norton Sound Region experienced a 233 percent increase in diabetes during the same time period. This is one of the highest rates in the world. A researcher from the National Institute of Health recently visited Nome and exclaimed, "In other places we study the effects of a problem after it has occurred. Here you are riding a wave that is about to crest."

The socioeconomic causes of this epidemic are complex. But there are solutions. Two ongoing national research projects that include people from the Norton Sound Region have clearly demonstrated that obesity, diabetes, and the resulting cardiovascular disease can be prevented by two simple actions: first, maintain a healthy diet, rich in omega-3 fatty acids; and second, remain physically active. This is why your doctor tells you to eat more fish, like salmon, and exercise for at least 30 minutes each day.

In rural Alaska, healthy foods such as salmon and seal oil, and the energy expended to gather them, once resulted in low rates of diabetes and cardiovascular disease. The rise in these chronic diseases appears to parallel the decline in access to traditional sources of nutrition.

This trend was first seen in the lower-48. For example, diabetes and heart disease was once rare among the Karuk tribes of Northern California. Prior to World War II, the Karuk consumed an average of 450 pounds of salmon per person per year. Today salmon consumption in this group is less than five pounds per person per year, and the rates of diabetes and heart disease is rising at twice the U.S. average.

According to Dr. Kari Norgaard, a sociologist from the University of California, the dramatic reversal is directly linked to the destruction of a fisheries resource base.

The decline of salmon in California rivers resulted from dams built without fish ladders and water mismanagement beginning in the 1960s. Based on a study of the Karuk experience, there appears to be a clear link between a decline in access to salmon, and a decline in the health of a people.

Regarding the Karuk tribes, Dr. Norgaard states, "The loss of traditional food sources is now recognized as being directly responsible for a host of diet-related illnesses among Native Americans including diabetes, obesity, heart disease, tuberculosis, hypertension, kidney troubles and strokes."

The people of northwest Alaska face a similar threat. If mismanaged, or worse unmanaged, salmon runs in the Norton Sound region could decline and perhaps disappear.

It must be recognized that the loss of salmon is not a mere threat to the economics of a region; it is a threat to the very health of rural Americans. Nothing can replace a healthy lifestyle with access to bountiful runs of nutritious salmon. An unlimited supply of federal aid and the best medications will do nothing to prevent the destructive wave of diabetes compared to the physical effort exerted and nutrition gained from casting a net, preparing the catch, and eating the salmon, a vital source of cardiovascular health.

If we find a way to perpetuate healthy salmon runs in this region, we will have contributed an important piece to the solution of one of the most pressing health concerns of our time.

Saying It Sincerely

Rev. Karen Sonray, Our Savior Lutheran Church Member Nome Ministerial Association

For some people, Father's Day is a difficult day because they do not have good memories of their father.

Years ago, I can remember a teenaged girl who was continually disappointed in her father. She prayed for him regularly. He wasn't able to be there for her as she grew up. In fact, his tendency was to ask her for help instead of vice-versa. His dependence on alcohol came first and was a stumbling block in their relationship.

After attending a national youth gathering with our church, this same teenager came back and delivered a heartfelt report to the congregation. She returned home with new insight. "Now I realize I do have a father I can count on. Even though my earthly father isn't the way I need him to be, I have a heavenly Father who is always there to help and guide me." She went on to tell us how she was living with this truth in a new way now. It was helping her as a person and also helping her in her relationship with her dad. She had a father who was perfect and gave her all she needed: her heavenly father. Yes, her earthly father was broken, but she could see him with eyes of compassion instead of harsh judgment.

Jesus called his heavenly Father "abba" which is Aramaic for "papa." He taught his disciples to pray, "Our Father (papa) who art in heaven..."

On the one hand, God is fully "other"; on the other hand, God is always near, "Papa." As a distant Father "who art in heaven," God is to be held in awe. The one who created the universe evokes within us a sense of mystery and reverence. He gives life and takes life away. We are fragile and small in his presence. On the other hand, God is also near, approachable, slow to anger, abounding in steadfast love. The Hebrew word "hesed," which means mercy or loving-kindness, is often used to describe God. "Papa" reflects a God who understands and protects.

As you celebrate Father's Day, pray for all fathers and give thanks to God who is our "heavenly papa."

Heavenly Father, pour out your blessing on all fathers and those who provide fatherly care. Grant them courage under pressure. When troubles overwhelm them, grant them calm. As doubts arise, build up their trust in your promises. When joy and laughter fill their days, give them thankful hearts raised to you.

We ask this in Jesus name. Amen.

BSSD SEMINAR—Esther Iyatunguk of Shishmaref works on reading involvement.

BSSD brings all in to go all out for Reading

By Rob Picou Bering Strait School District

They came from Savoonga, and they came from Gambell. They came from Shishmaref, from Stebbins, and St. Michael, and they came from White Moutain, Elim, Shaktoolik, Golvin, and Unalakleet, from Koyuk and from Wales. On May 22, 68 paraprofessionals and 11 teachers from all over the Bering Strait Region came to Unalakleet for a five-day intensive CORE (Consortium of Reading Excellence) reading academy put on by the Bering Strait School District.

The reading academy began with one undeniable fact, a truth as bright as the sunshine on a beautiful spring day. If children do not get to grade level in reading by the third grade, there is very strong evidence that they will never get to grade level in reading. The years from birth to seven are the most important in determining failure or success later in high school. We must work together in becoming the one single heart beat that pumps life into the educational dreams of all children by making sure all children learn to read on grade level by the third grade.

At the reading academy, the paraprofessionals and teachers studied linguistics and early literacy, phonemic awareness, multisyllabic words and fluency, continued on page 16

Notice of Public Hearings

In accordance with National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA) requirements, the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management, Regulation and Enforcement will hold public hearings June 21–29 to accept comments on a Revised Draft Supplemental Environmental Impact Statement (SEIS) for Chukchi Sea Oil and Natural Gas Lease Sale 193, held in February 2008.

Lease Sale 193 was challenged in court by a coalition of environmental groups and Alaska Native organizations. On July 21, 2010, the Alaska District Court remanded the sale back to BOEMRE with a specific set of concerns related to the Environmental Impact Statement prepared prior to the sale. The bureau drafted the SEIS to address these concerns, and then revised the draft to incorporate a new analysis of a hypothetical Very Large Oil Spill scenario.

BOEMRE is accepting public comments on the Revised Draft SEIS through July 11, 2011. These comments will be considered when the bureau prepares the Final SEIS and a Record of Decision regarding the lease sale.

Spare the Spam text messages

Courtesy of the Better Business Bureau

ANCHORAGE- Text messaging has become a mainstream form of communication for many, so consequently, solicitors are utilizing it too.

"Unwanted, unsolicited text messages can be costly and annoying,' said Robert W.G. Andrew, CEO of Better Business Bureau serving Alaska, Oregon and Western Washington. "Preventing spam entirely may be impossible, but there are ways to reduce it."

The Telephone Consumer Protection Act and Controlling the Assault of Non-Solicited Pornography and Marketing Act—also known as the CAN-SPAM Act—were developed to curb mounting unwanted commercial advertising. According to the Federal Communications Commis-

- Unwanted "commercial messages" sent to cell phones from online communications, such as email and Internet addresses, are prohib-
- "Short messages" sent from one mobile phone to another, without the use of an Internet address, are not covered by the FCC ban.
- Auto-dialers are prohibited when sending unwanted text messages to wireless phones.

Consumers can reduce text message spam by utilizing simple steps:

Phones: Register www.donotcall.gov register phones on the National Do Not Call Registry to prevent unsolicited text messages and phone calls. Violators can be reported to this same resource.

Understand Permissions: Regardless of National Do Not Call Registry participation, consumers who have given prior consent or have an established business relationship with the sender are not protected under the Telephone Consumer Protection Act. Many retail stores ask for phone numbers at checkout; while some are gathering demographics, others are sending shoppers text messages. Before releasing numbers, ask if they're required and how they'll be used Block Messages: Contact wireless providers. Many allow users to refuse messages from certain delivery types. Ask providers for help with reducing and reporting spam.

Don't Talk Back: Spammers thrive on feedback, so don't respond to unknown text messages. If excessive unwanted messages continue, consider changing phone numbers. Learn more about protecting information at bbb.org.

Nomeites turn out in droves to raise funds for Wes Perkins' recovery

Story and photos by Diana Haecker

There was a major traffic jam on the Nome-Council Highway, lasting for a couple hours on Saturday afternoon. More than 200 runners, bikers and walkers took over the three-mile stretch of road from the east end of town to the Nome River Bridge and back. From the Nome Bridge it looked like an unbroken chain of people running, biking and walking on the road all the way to Nome.

They all turned out for a good cause and this time it was for Nome's own Wes Perkins.

Just after news broke that Wes Perkins had been mauled by a bear near Skookum Pass in mid-May, Katie O'Connor had the idea to put on the "Run for Wes" to raise money for Perkins' recovery.

Perkins underwent surgery and is still at the Seattle Harborview Med-

As participants gathered at the East End Park before noon, John Handeland took the bullhorn and gave a brief speech, reminding everybody about Wes Perkins' years of leading the Nome Volunteer Fire Department and putting in countless hours of helping others in distress.

"Wes has run for us, so today, we're gonna run for Wes," said Handeland. With that, people of all ages took off, biking on all sorts of contraptions including tag-alongs and unicycles. Families with strollers, dogs wearing the special made "Run for Wes" t-shirts and kids zooming back and forth on bikes took part in

In the end, organizer Katie O'Connor said that she had hoped to bring in $5,000. But after all was counted, the event raised $12,600 for Wes.

O'Connor said that the NVFD, Sandra Rowe and Cheri Kruschek helped set up for the event. Stores, airlines, Nome organizations and individuals donated door prizes and food. After participants came off the road and returned to East End Park, the Nome Volunteer Fire Department's chefs served up 200 hot dogs and 300 pieces of chicken, donated by AC, Safeway, Nome Trading and the Bering Sea Lions Club. Kids independently set up a lemonade stand and Amber Gray said they raised $210 for Perkins from their lemonade sales during the event.

LOCAL

After everybody was fed and watered, the event ended with a drawing of door prizes and the grand prize – a wolf pelt - was donated by Wesley Perkins himself. The lucky winners were the Rolland Trowbridge family.

According to O'Connor, Wes Perkins' son Casey Perkins also organized a softball fundraiser in the Mat-Su valley last weekend.

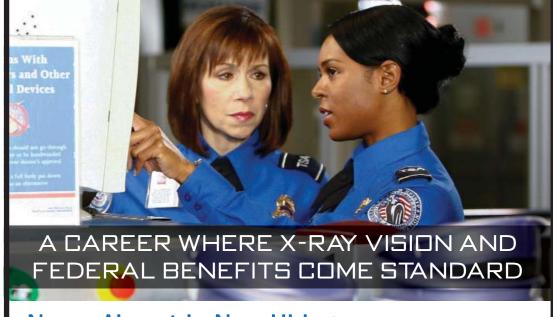

DOUBLE POWER - Keith Conger had some help from his daughter Mallory biking the six-mile course from the East End Park to the Nome River Bridge during the "Run for Wes" event.

DRAWING- Nate Perkins helps Katie O'Connor draw the winner of the wolf pelt, held in the background by Cheri Kruschek, during the door prize drawing at the "Run for Wes" event.

CHECKPOINT - Jeremy Perkins, Diana Handeland and Addison Shield set up a checkpoint with juice for runners at the Nome River bridge at the "Run for Wes" event.

Council continues to finesse general fund budget

By Sandra L. Medearis

Nome Common Council had a busy day slated for Wednesday of this week, scheduled to tour port sites and municipal buildings—public works building, ambulance garage and fire hall. Then they were to meet with the public for a public comment session concerning the City's spending plans for spending year 2012 that begins July 1.

And what compensation do Council members receive for their service? According to proposed budget documents, Council seats receive the following: a whopping wage of $50 per month—that's $600 per year; $132 per year retirement; $2.64 for Worker's Compensation, $32.70 for Social Security, $8.70 Medicare contribution; and then the big ticket items—eligibility for payment of City health insurance, $6,701.52; and a life insurance policy costing $156.60. According to Councilwoman Mary Knodel, several council members have their own employee group health insurance and do not partake of the public-paid insurance.

The mayor's seat is worth $75 per month wages—yearly total, $900; $198 retirement; Worker's Compensation expense, $3.96; Social Security contribution, $55.80; Medicare, $13.05; health insurance, $6701.52; life insurance, $156.60. Add $60,000 for a new car for the mayor. It is due to arrive on the barge.

Including the health insurance, the City has budgeted a cost of $40,556.61 for the public's Council and mayoral employees. But added to this, the public pays other budgeted expenses: travel and per diem for the mayor, $8,000; travel and per diem for the Council, $5,000 (reduced from current year budget of

Tribes demand consultation with federal fishery managers

By Laurie McNicholas

An ongoing conflict between the National Marine Fisheries Service and Bering Strait tribes surfaced June 9 in public testimony at a meeting of the North Pacific Fishery Management Council in Nome. The council and NMFS together manage fisheries in federal waters from three to 200 miles off Alaska. The testimony focused on a research plan for the northern Bering Sea developed by scientists at the NMFS Alaska Fisheries Science Center in Juneau at the request of the council.

In 2007 the council decided to close commercial bottom trawl fishing the Northern Bering Sea Research Area. See map of the area on page 5. Essentially no commercial bottom trawling has taken place in the NBRSA, and groundfish species have expanded northward into the area due to climate change. The council asked NMFS to develop a research plan to determine the potential impacts of bottom trawl fisheries on crab, marine mammals, threatened or endangered species and subsistence in the area.

The Kawerak, Inc. board of directors adopted a resolution on March 31, 2011 requesting that NMFS permanently ban the trawl fleet in the

Rock Creek cyanide shipped out of Nome

By Nugget staff

On Thursday night, three container vans loaded with cyanide were on their way out of Nome via barge.

On the Web:

www.nomenugget.net E-mail:

nugget@nomenugget.com

The containers were delivered from the idle Rock Creek gold mine six miles out of town to the Nome port.

According to prior statements from the state's large mine team manager Jack diMarchi, the mine shut down before any cyanide was used.

The Rock Creek mine has been in care and maintenance status since November 2008. Since then, the chemicals have been stored at the mine site until last week.

Harbormaster Joy Baker said that they were loaded on the barge on June 16. She said a container of ammonium nitrate from mining operations at Bluff was also escorted to the barge by a Nome Volunteer Fire Department fire truck. Baker said the U.S. Coast Guard requires more precautionary measures for transporting ammonium nitrate than for cyanide. Cyanide is not considered a hazardous material in its dry form. Trucking the vanloads of cyanide to the port did not require a permit or escort service from the Nome Volunteer Fire Dept.

Baker said regulations allow for a 10-day window between the time containers of cyanide are delivered to the port and shipped, but she told mine officials to deliver the containers when the barge arrived and was ready to accept them.

The Alaska Logistics barge left the Nome port on June 17 and is on its way to Seward and on to Seattle.

Letter to the Editor

I really appreciated your in depth coverage of the court case involving Greg Smith vs. Norton Sound Health Corp. It seems to me that NSHC has all their bases covered by having the "at will" contracts for employees. By this I mean that even the Americans for Civil Liberties Union can't touch them. It seems that as an employer now having my entire employee's signing an "at will" contract I can fire them for their race or religion as well as sexual orientation. This is a new revelation for all employers out there who wish to discriminate on any basis that they wish. Even with good evaluations for employee conduct and duties assigned, employers in Nome can do as they wish. I do feel, however, that integrity in the field of addiction should have something to do with how employers treat their patients, and as long as they choose to use this option I don't see how they can fairly treat people with addiction problems.

I personally know Greg Smith and have sought his counsel for substance abuse. He helped me a great deal and has helped many others as well. I did not always agree with Mr. Smith, nor will I ever on some topics about addiction. That is between the two of us. But I will say that we also have an "at will" contract. I do know that in the future five, 10 even 20 years from now, because of Greg Smith's integrity he would drop what he was doing and come to my aid at a time when I needed him. That is the type of commitment that he has towards his people on an "at will" contract.

NSHC has made it perfectly clear by having these types of contracts with their employees the commitment that they share in employee well-being. I hope the people of Nome realize what has just taken place right under their noses. The "at will" contract is a slap in the face to anyone who considers themselves to have any type of intelligence.

NSHC had to find a legal loophole in order to win this case, and they did. Like so many legal battles with the "little guy" against a corporation, the little guy will lose. In this case, the little guy is every person who works for NSHC and the state of Alaska. The courts have made stepping on employees much easier as now precedence has been set for future court cases.

What a shame. Wayne Sides

Dear Editor,

06/29 W

Hello! I'm writing this letter about the children/teenagers that walk and continue to walk in middle of the road when cars are passing! Who in the heck do these kids think they are? Weren't they taught any better? My two children aren't perfect and still are babies, but that doesn't give them an excuse to play or walk in the middle of the road. They are still being taught when to cross the road or get off the road when cars are passing. But these children/teenagers are old enough to know better!

When driving on the Beltz Highway there's not just one or two, but three or more people/children riding their bikes and they expect vehicles to drive around them! Why don't they put that bike trail to use? Isn't that what it was made for?

06:36 a.m. LDT 1.1 H

Now it's summertime and people are going camping or going for a ride out in the country, which brings a lot of traffic on that highway.

Aren't they concerned about their safety?

Accidents can happen and will happen to anyone, anywhere at any-

Let's all have a fun, safe summer! Sincerely. Kathy Ivanoff Nome, AK 99762

Hi everyone,

As we approach summer, I hope that every one of you will be careful with what you do. Every one of you is precious. Remember to tell people where you are going-that is really important! You really do matter, and so does finding you-if they ever have to go looking.

As for the fishing—when are you ever going to listen? Instead of letting the trawlers take so much, they should be only able to take so much and save some for our people! After all, we got here first. We are supposed to use those fish (that they are so greedy for) to feed our families and to give them some monetary support that fishermen should be making to support their families, instead of letting the people on the trawlers take away our livelihood.

Spirit of Cooperation Beats Just Plain Mean

The events in Nome and Juneau these past few weeks are at opposite ends of the spectrum in light of the ability to work for the common good. In Nome we had the pleasure of entertaining visitors for the North Pacific Fishery Management Council meeting. It was a pleasure meeting these folks. The Folk Festival and the Midnight Sun festivities brought out friends and neighbors to dance, sing, and feast on fine food and do fun things like parade, race on foot and by raft, jump into the Bering Sea and Nome River and work together to make the events a success.

While the folks of western Alaska are enjoying each other's friendship, the politicians in Juneau are stepping on each other's necks while cooperation falls between the cracks. The redistricting of our region to spread so thin that it stretches from Russia to Canada is bevond comprehension. The inaction that allows the Coastal Zone Management program to lapse is inexcusable. The power plays of the Governor and the financial hostage holding onto the budget and the veto threats are just not in the interest of good government. The 90day legislative session is too short to be constructive. The call back for special sessions gets old. Alaska is a huge state with many important issues to be dealt with in a judicious and timely manner. The 90-day legislative session does not meet our needs.

Let's hope that the legislature can get together and stop fighting like cats in a gunnysack. Sure they need to consider the interests of their constituents, but they need to take a look at the bigger picture and consider the interest of the entire state. Alaska is more than Anchorage and the road system. We need to get past the rural/urban divide and hidden agendas so we can cooperate for the benefit of all Alaskans.  $-{\rm N.L.M.}-$

Sound Off

By Tim Smith

The following is the text of some of the testimony I provided to the North Pacific Fishery Management Council when they met in Nome June 6-14.

The MSA requires that the State of Alaska conduct a decennial review of the CDQ program beginning in 2012; twenty years after the program's inception and every ten years thereafter.

It is unclear how the state will address this unfunded mandate. Because of the importance of the CDQ program to western Alaska and its profound impacts on the economy, society and culture of western Alaska communities it is essential to ensure that the decennial review will be done well.

The week before last we heard from the North Pacific Fishery Management Council's Scientific and Statistical Committee and its Advisory Panel about the need for additional analysis of the impacts of chum salmon bycatch on coastal communities. These impacts and others associated with management of fisheries within the U.S. Exclusive Economic Zone are intimately connected to the CDQ program, and I recommend that the council direct its staff to actively participate in the CDQ program decennial review.

Previous attempts to evaluate the CDQ program suffered from significant shortcomings. The National Research Council of the National Academy of Sciences published the findings of its review in 1999. The report discussed the program's newness and data limitations, particularly the lack of financial data upon which to base quantitative analysis.

Governor Murkowski's 2005 Blue Ribbon Committee report suffered from the same lack of detailed economic data and lacked objectivity.

Many of the decisions the council makes impact the CDQ program, and a comprehensive decennial review will be a valuable reference in your deliberations.

In dealing with the salmon bycatch issue, we have seen how the profit mak-

Michael Brawner begins to take the helm of NPS

By Lori Head

Nothing formal, but there was a slight changing of the guard as Jon Wehde, current superintendent and Michael Brawner, superintendent beginning July 1, sat side-by-side at the June 14 board of education regular meeting.

Superintendent reports

Wehde reported that he is meeting with Brawner and business manager Cathi Wojtanek, the "background team," as they work through a "lengthy agenda for handover notes, comments, policy." He also urged the board to "spend extra measure of scholarly time getting ready for your FY13 budget" citing "rising costs, a mature staff, competitive pay rates all have led to a point now where it begins to challenge the tax base here locally" and recommended they begin early, "before Christmas, thinking about that budget."

In Brawner's written report were numerous examples of time he has spent addressing board identified priorities for his position as the new superintendent. He's met with local leaders and has scheduled meetings with the city council and others as he seeks input regarding the community of Nome, its schools and what the perceived strengths and challenges are with respect to the school district. Let's Move!

Kelly Keyes, CAMP director, presented a brief overview of First Lady Michelle Obama's "Let's Move!" program, which aims to solve the problem of childhood obesity. Board member Betsy Brennan volunteered to serve on this new committee. One of the four pillars of the campaign is Pillar 2: Improving Nutrition in Schools, and Keyes felt it was important that the school board was "on board" before Mayor Denise Michels registered Nome as a Let's Move! city, possibly the first in Alaska.

Security cameras

During open discussion, the board revisited the idea of installing security cameras in Nome's schools. There is a Community Oriented Policing Services grant, available twice a year that the city has to write, to help fund the cameras. The board seemed interested and tasked Brawner to meet with the city manager to pursue the grant.

Social studies curriculum, FY12 final budget and board policies approved

Action taken by the board included: • Approval of a comprehensive social studies curriculum adoption of K-2 -Daily Geography; 3-6 grades -Houghton Mifflin published series; 7 grade - World Explorer; 8 grade -US History to 1877; and High School - Civics in Practice.

· Approval of a final budget submitted by Wojtanek with four changes:

1. $774,000 city of Nome additional funds revenue, which reflected the $100,000 reduction approved by

2."TRS and PERS on-behalf" increases that are "in-and-out" dollars

3. State foundation revenue increase due to Senate Bill 84 Vocational Education Funding

4. Other state revenue of $134,111 due to a one-time House Bill 108 -Supplemental State Aid Grant · Second reading and approval of nine board policies.

Next meeting

The Nome Board of Education will meet again in a work session on June 28 with a special session following to take action on the transportation (busing) contract and the athletic director's contract.

$9,000); dues and memberships for the mayor, $4,200 and public officials' insurance $20,469. Public officials' insurance holds individual council members harmless from lawsuits based on City actions, without which, few would want to serve.

One of the weighty duties of the Council is current deliberation over the FY 2012 budget of $9.9 million that has volleyed from a base of 16 mills property tax down to 10 mills and back up to 12 mills set by the Council June 14. A large portion of the budget—about $7.5 million depends on sources other than property tax. But based on a property tax rate of 12 mills for the remainder, the budget raises property taxes by 71 percent. The mill rate considers that the City must by law allot four mills to school funding. On June 22, the Council was to take public comment, almost certain to be negative. The budget is strained by increased costs for state retirement-PERS-contributions resulting from unfunded state mandates and rising salaries. Members of the Council say they cannot meet the costs for City staff and services with a lower mill rate, as that would send them to the bank to wipe out the reserve account.

Still, taxpayers are also strained by rising food and fuel costs. Nome is one of the four Alaska communities with the highest cost of living in the state-along with Barrow, Bethel, and Wainwright, according to the state Dept. of Labor. State figures say that in September 2010 a family of four with kids ages 6 to 11 needed to spend an average of $233.70 per week for food. Signs on the pumps show $4.99 a gallon for gas and $4.99 for fuel oil not purchased in large quantities. Nome folks are watching the horizon for the arrival of the fuel barges that they think will jack up fuel and utility prices, based on recent years' experi-

In the budget process, City administrators have cut several positions, turned off utilities and closed down the Mini-Convention Center, referred repairs on newly constructed public buildings back to construction contractors, whacked the landfill budget in half from $528,000 to $249,000. The Council had a meeting set for Tuesday noon to confer with state tax assessor Steve Van Sant on assessment and taxation is-

• Bering Strait tribes demand consultation with federal fishery managers

NBRSA.

A question underlying the conflict between NMFS and Bering Strait tribes is: What are the most effective ways for NMFS to learn what the tribes know about marine resources and their subsistence uses in the northern Bering Sea, and for NMFS to fully inform tribes of the agency's plans for conducting research in the area? The tribes collectively possess vast knowledge of the region and its subsistence resources.

NMFS has used an outreach process to gather input from tribal representatives and other area residents, including a community/subsistence workshop in Anchorage in February 2010 that drew together residents of northern Bering Sea communities and NMFS scientists. However, Bering Strait tribes say the outreach approach is inadequate. They want NMFS to use a collaborative process—tribal consultation—to involve them in development of the research plan.

Prior to taking public testimony on the research plan, the council heard Dr. Cynthia Yeoung of NMFS/AFSC report findings from a trawl survey conducted by NMFS in the Northern Bering Sea Research Area in 2010, outcomes of a science workshop on the NBRSA in January 2011 in Anchorage, and an outline of a research plan for the area. Nicole Kimball, fishery analyst for the council, presented a report on an outreach workshop conducted by NMFS/AFSC staff with assistance from council staff in February 2010 in Anchorage. She noted that a similar workshop is scheduled Sept. 12, 2011 in Nome.

Julie Raymond-Yakoubian, anthropologist for Kawerak, Inc., a consortium of 20 tribes in the Bering Strait region, emphasized the need for tribal consultation in the following testimony to the council.

"First I want to welcome you to Nome and thank you for choosing to hold your meeting here. I want to highlight and review some of the concerns that Bering Strait region Tribes have about the northern Bering Sea and the research plan being developed.

- "Tribes are extremely concerned about commercial bottom trawl fisheries moving north and have formally expressed to you and to NMFS/AFSC on several occasions that they are opposed to bottom trawl fisheries in the northern Bering Sea.
   "The pressures on subsistence resources and the communities that rely on those resources are growing
- sources and the communities that rely on those resources are growing daily— from climate changes that have modified species distributions to increased marine shipping through the region and the threats that that brings, just to mention a few. The cumulative effects of all these pressures are unknown and also likely to become intensified as climate change in the north continues. Tribes should not have to bear the burden of additional pressures on the resources that are critical to their nutritional, cultural, spiritual and economic wellbeing.
- "You heard from Ms. Kimball in the staff report about the 'community and subsistence workshop' and the concerns that tribes and tribal organizations expressed then. These have not been addressed—as you heard Ms. Yeoung say in her presentation, they have been 'registered.' It should also be pointed out that that workshop was the first time that Tribes heard about the 2010 trawl survey. I'm sure you can understand why Tribes were so upset at that meeting to hear about the trawl survey, just months before it was to happen.
- pen.
   "I want to emphasize that consultation with [Tribes] is required by Executive Order 13175 on any actions that have the potential to impact Tribes or Tribal resources—this includes research and planning activities. This has not been completed and it appears that NMFS believes that they are not required to consult on such activities. Again—consultation is required. The fact that it has not been completed, and the fact that Tribes have expressed so much (and such intense) concern on this issue should also be of great concern to the Council as the body that has directed this plan and research to be carried

- "The AFSC and the Council have both mentioned that they want more and more specific information on subsistence activities and areas of concern related to subsistence. I think that Tribes have provided this information—they are not be[ing] evasive when they say that they use and are concerned about the entire northern Bering Sea. This is the truth; people either directly use or indirectly rely upon the entire region.
- "If you read the draft NBSRA research plan you will see nothing substantive about subsistence. You also heard little about it in the presentation earlier. Subsistence activities, knowledge and systems are no less complex than ecological or habitat studies. Subsistence cannot, in fact, be successfully separated from them. The implications of this plan are huge for the residents of our region and it is both frightening and offensive that we are being pushed to the side in the development of this plan, as well as associated research.
- "Tribes- most of the subsistence users we are talking about here-are not just stakeholders in this issue. Tribes are sovereign governments and you are talking about their back-yard, their breadbasket, their cultural practices and heritage. Tribal consultation is not optional and Tribal concerns need to be addressed. This should not wait until an interpretation or analysis phase, it needs to happen now.
- "Kawerak strongly recommends that the Council direct NMFS to carry out real and meaningful consultation and that the Council fully participate in this process."

Research plan questions

Stefanie Moreland, the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game's federal fisheries coordinator and council alternate for ADF&G Commissioner Cora Campbell noted that NMFS is meeting current timelines for development of the research plan, and the schedule calls for a community and subsistence workshop in Nome in September.

Raymond-Yakoubian said the September meeting date was set through talking with tribes, but such a poor relationship exists between the tribes and the agency that it's hard to say how successful the meeting would be. Tribes are willing to share information about subsistence resources but are worried how the information will be used, she added.

Council member Dan Hull asked Raymond-Yakoubian whether she has read the evaluation of the proposed research plan by the council's Science and Statistical Committee and whether it begins to address the concerns in her testimony.

The SSC's review of the research plan includes this statement: "There is no evidence in the plan of the incorporation of information collected during the community and science workshops, aside from the brief minutes of the science workshop that appear in an appendix. Residents of coastal communities have critical knowledge to be incorporated into the research plan. The SSC received a draft report, titled 'The Northern Bering Sea: Our way of Life', prepared by the Bering Sea Elders Advisory Group. Though still in draft, this document contains extremely useful information including detailed maps of important areas for walrus, seals, whales, subsistence uses, etc."

Raymond-Yakoubian said she has read the SCC report, and it does not specifically address tribal consultation. "In my experience, tribes are not opposed to research," she added. "This particular type of research they fear." She said bottom trawl research may seem innocuous to some because it involves only a small area, but the implications are huge and need to be considered. She said the NMFS outreach efforts are appreciated, but they are not enough. She suggested hiring a tribal liaison for the region for tribes and the agency to go to.

schedt said he struggles to reconcile a couple of things the council is looking at. He said the council intended to ensure that fishermen who use bottom trawlers did not move into the northern Bering Sea till the council understood the impacts on subsistence users and the entire ecosystem.

Henderschedt asked how the council is to respond to a request not to allow bottom trawling in that area. Why do the research and spend research funds if in the end, tribes want a ban on bottom trawling? he asked.

Raymond-Yakoubian said the tribes are not opposed to research, but they do not want bottom trawling in the northern Bering Sea. She said the tribes do not like bottom trawl research, but that does not mean they don't want research done in the area. The council wants bottom trawl research to open the area to bottom trawling, but that does not mean the tribes oppose all research in the area, she explained.

Others who presented public comments about the proposed research plan to the council included Charles Degnan, Unalakleet; John Warrenchuk, Oceana; Fred Phillip, Bering Sea Elders Advisory Group; Dorothy Childers and Muriel Morse, Alaska Marine Conservation Council; Tim Andrew, Assn. of Village Council Presidents; David O. David, Kwillingok; Loretta Bullard, president of Kawerak; Tim Smith, president, Nome Fishermen's Assn.; Eric Osborne, Nome fisherman;.; Edwina Krier, representing Patrick Oomiak, Sr. of Little Diomede; and John Gauvin, representing the Alaska Seafood Cooperative.

The council decided on June 10 to change course on the NBRSA research plan. They suspended continued development of the research plan by the NMFS/AFSC and asked for a white paper to compile specific information on the area. (For details, see "Northern Bering Sea remains protected from bottom trawling" on page 6.)

"Given the change in direction, and public testimony suggesting to delay the workshop until after the white paper is completed, the council provided discretion to NMFS as to whether to continue to hold the workshop in September 2011," wrote Nicole Kimball, fishery analyst for the council, in an email following the meeting.

Dock price for 2011 Norton Sound red king crab jumps to $5.29

Guideline harvest level drops to 358,000 lbs.

Fishers will receive $5.29 per pound for red king crab delivered to the dock at Norton Sound Seafood Products in Nome this season, NSSP and Norton Sound Economic Development Corp announced June 17 in a press release. Last year NSSP paid $3.77 per pound for crab delivered to the dock.

June 28 is the opening date for NSEDC's Community Development Quota crab fishery, the company reports. "Once the first deliveries can be checked for quality and meat-fill, NSSP will immediately proceed with accepting deliveries from the open-access fishery," states the release. "NSSP is working on plans to continue offering tendering services from the Golovin area and in the southern portion of Norton Sound. Tendered crab will fetch a price of $5.04 to fishermen.

"Aided by the strong demand worldwide for crab, Norton Sound Seafood Products is pleased to offer a more than 40 percent increase in the price paid to fishermen over last year," said Northern NSSP Manager Rich Ferry in the release. "We are proud to support our resident fishermen. With such strong prices this year, we anticipate a great season." NSSP is a division of NSEDC.

The Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game has set the guideline harvest level for the 2011 Norton Sound summer commercial king crab fishery at 358,000 pounds. Last year the guideline harvest level for the fishery was 400,000 pounds. ADF&G has allocated 26,850 pounds (7.5 percent) of the 2011 harvest level to the CDQ fishery and 331,150 pounds to the open access fishery.

Northern Bering Sea remains protected from bottom trawling

Bering Sea Elders and AMCC present report to fishery managers in Nome

By Dorothy Childers Alaska Marine Conservation Council

An important step in work by the Bering Sea Elders Advisory Group, the Alaska Marine Conservation Council and other tribal and conservation organizations to protect the northern Bering Sea from bottom trawling occurred at the North Pacific Fishery Management Council meeting June 10 in Nome.

The National Marine Fisheries Service presented a proposed research plan for studying the potential effects of bottom trawling in the northern Bering Sea. Regulations require that research be conducted before the NPFMC would consider allowing fisheries to expand northward in the future.

The genesis for this discussion was a decision in 2007 to establish the northern bottom trawl boundary and the Northern Bering Sea Research Area. The NPFMC requested that NMFS develop a research plan that could eventually guide future decisions, and they specified concerns about impacts on crab, marine mammals, threatened or endangered species (such as spectacled eiders), and subsistence.

Since 2007, the Bering Sea Elders Advisory Group formed to bring tribes together around this issue, engage traditional perspectives, and support tribal participation in the fishery management process.

AMCC has supported the Elders Group by working with them to develop maps identifying the extent of area used for subsistence and areas of ecological importance for the species tribes rely on. Local smallscale commercial fisheries were also included in the maps.

In Nome, the NPFMC's Scientific and Statistical Committee reviewed the agency's proposed research plan. The plan was a basic before-andafter study on the acute effects of a limited amount of trawling. The SSC found the proposed plan to be inadequate to evaluate the chronic effects of bottom trawling that would likely accumulate should a fishery develop in the un-trawled northern region. The proposed research plan did not address the ecological consequences of a potential future fishery.

The NPFMC asked the agency to set the proposed research plan aside and instead to prepare a white paper laying out the background information more thoroughly about the northern Bering Sea ecosystem, culturally important uses of the region, findings from past research on the effects of bottom trawling in similar habitats, and incorporating information already gathered from communities at workshops and meetings about the northern Bering Sea.

The NPFMC asked industry to identify where they might want to trawl in the future based on their knowledge of where the fish are likely to move, because this would help to focus community input in the future. They also want to know about the possibility of conducting a trawl effects study in the area east of St. Matthew Island that is not closed to trawling but where there might be similar habitat.

This background paper would become the basis for re-evaluating the overall need for a research plan. They noted funding is unlikely to be available for the kind of research that will really answer the question of ecosystem concerns in the northern Bering Sea. Also the bottom trawl fleet reported they are not in a hurry to move into the area. Due to the more complex research that it would take, the probable lack of funding, and no pressure from industry at the present time, progress on the research plan will slow down. Because allowing bottom trawling to move into the ecologically rich and culturally important northern Bering Sea is not allowed without the research, these waters will remain protected for the time being.

A culmination of three years of work, the Bering Sea Elders Advisory Group and AMCC presented The Northern Bering Sea: Our Way of Life, a map report that shows extensive culturally and ecologically sensitive areas across the region. The maps were created through interviews with elders and active hunters in 17 villages combined with existing data from other sources. Excerpts from the interviews provide cultural perspective on subsistence ways of life and traditional values. The map report will be useful in supporting the interests of coastal tribes and local fishermen to generate a long-term protection plan for the northern Bering Sea. The report was well received by SSC and NPFMC members in Nome. It is still undergoing final revisions and will be available in limited print form and electronically later this summer.

The NPFMC is also considering whether or not to move the bottom trawl boundary farther offshore around Nunivak Island and Kuskokwim Bay to provide better protection for subsistence. In some places, the boundary comes within 20 miles of land in areas heavily used for marine mammal hunting and halibut fishing. Herring harvested by villages on the coast pass through this area. Industry leaders, the Elders Group and the Association of Village Council Presidents are engaged in discussions to see if they can reach agreement. They will report the results of their meetings to the NPFMC in Decem-

Norton Sound commercial salmon prices up for 2011

UNALAKLEET-Norton Sound salmon fishermen who deliver to Norton Sound Seafood Products will start the 2011 season with a higher price

Norton Sound Seafood Products announces that it will pay fishermen 72 cents per pound for chum salmon and 25 cents/pound for pink salmon landed at the dock in Unalakleet to begin the 2011 season. This marks a 20 percent increase for chum and a 25 percent increase for pinks over 2010 prices. Fishermen were paid 60 cents/pound for chums and 20 cents/pound for pinks at the dock last year.

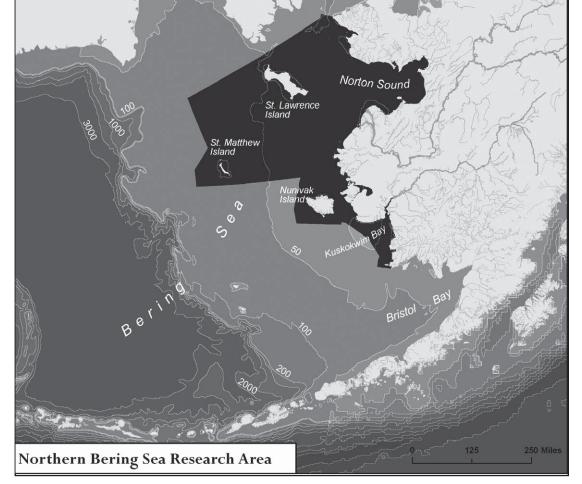

Norton Sound Seafood Products plans to start the season with three tenders on the fishing grounds to support harvesters. Deliveries to tenders in 2011 will initially net fishermen 67 cents/pound for chum and 20 cents/pound for pinks. Early season fishing will primarily be delivered to tenders with deliveries to the docks in Unalakleet coming later in the season.

The 2011 salmon season in Norton Sound Sub-districts 2 (Golovnin Bay) and 3 (Elim) commenced with a 24-hour opener at noon June 20. The Alaska Department of Fish and Game has predicted an above-average run of chum salmon in 2011 for the two sub-districts. ADF&G expects commercial harvests to range between 25,000-45,000 chum salmon for the two sub-districts

ADF&G reports that while chum salmon abundance is sufficient to warrant commercial fishing, a directed chum salmon fishery will not take place until July 1 in Sub-districts 5 (Shaktoolik) and 6 (Unalakleet) to protect Chinook salmon moving through those areas. Commercial fishing for coho salmon may occur later in July. Commercial fishing may also occur later in Sub-district 4 (Norton Bay/Koyuk) for chum, coho and pink salmon if escapement permits and there is market interest.

Commercial fishing for chum is closed in Sub-district 1 (Nome) and ADF&G does not expect commercial fishing to open for other salmon species this year. In its 2011 fisheries management plan, ADF&G noted that commercial fishing is not planned for the Port Clarence Sub-district.

What could be more fun than spending a few hours each day beading, carving, stamping, stitching, and learning some things you didn't know before about your own culture? For example, "What material are those beads made out of? The ones that your elders have been using to decorate moccasins and clothing for generations?" (Hint: It's not plastic.)

Artist Jeanne Leffingwell, founder and director of the Million Bead Project recently joined Summer School teacher Annette Corson and her students at Aniguiin School in Elim for a two-week intensive art residency. Teacher and students learned the answer to that question and much more as they, along with school secretary Emily 'Funny' Murray, explored printmaking, drawing, and beadwork. They learned to bead on a loom, and to do simple wirework, and appliqué, which is stitching beads to skin or cloth. While familiar to most Alaskans, beadwork is rarely taught in schools.

But according to the artist, "Playing with beads stimulates the imagination, builds hand-eye coordination, reinforces basic arithmetic, and elegantly introduces patterning and designing in a way that is tactile and fun."

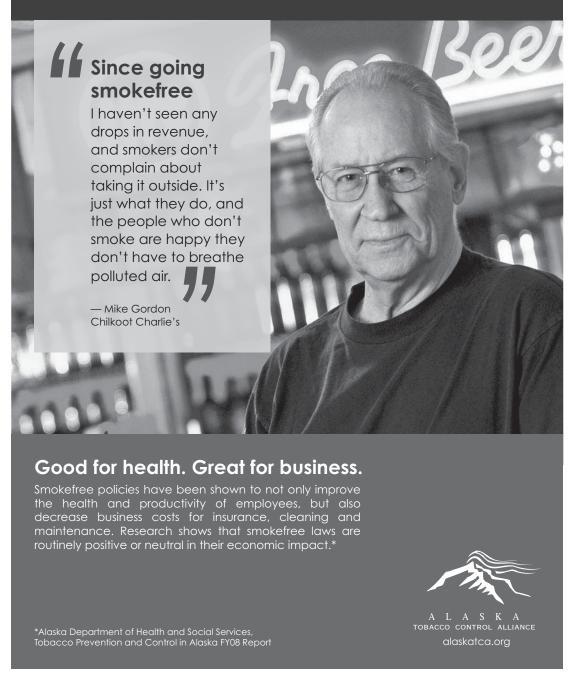

Leffingwell, who was raised in Alaska and now lives in Moscow Idaho, has spent more than 30 years collecting, studying and sharing different bead working techniques. She has created several Percent for Art Commissions for the State of Alaska, including Beaded Sky Curtain, in the William A. Egan Convention Center in Anchorage. In that piece, Leffingwell and eight assistants strung over five million glass seed beads (over 6.5 miles) which drape through an atrium.

Leffingwell is one of 12 artists visiting 14 different villages this summer under sponsorship of the Bering Straits School District, with help from the Alaska State Council on the Arts' New Visions Program. In its second year, the program's goal is to assist classroom teachers in integrating the arts into the general curriculum, where training and practice in the arts has been shown to increase student understanding as well as enthusiasm for learning. Did the program succeed in Elim?

"I wish I'd come and learned this," mused elder Eleanor Segock, when she came by last Friday to see projects the students had made.

Annette Corson brightly responded, "That's OK. I can teach you!"

Midnight Sun warms up festivities

By Diana Haecker

There are strange things happening under the midnight sun. At high noon on Saturday not only did the digital thermometer at the BSNC building register 78°F, but a bank robber also made the crowd weep with joy instead of shivering with fear. During the bank robbery that is traditionally occurring after the Midnight Sun parade, perennial "villain" Ken Shapiro got down on his knees and, to the surprise to everyone, proposed to his girlfriend Beatrice Buchholz with rock and all. She took to the microphone and said, "Yes" to a crowd going wild. Good guy, sheriff Wyatt Earp a.k.a. Arlo Hannigan then restored law and order by challenging the villains and distributing the loot of candy to the kids of town.

Nome's various festivities celebrating the Midnight Sun officially began on Wednesday with the barn dance to the music of local musicians

By Friday, "Pamyua" the feature band of the Midnight Sun Folk Fest had arrived and began their Nome experience by teaching children a few Yupik dances.

At night, the Nome Elementary School Commons was packed with at least 280 people to listen to the band's performance of what they call Inuit fusion and tribal funk. The band's name is pronounced Bum yoah and as Folk Fest emcee Pattie Lilly explained, means something like "encore" in Yup'ik. The band consists of brothers Phillip and Stephen Blanchett, and Phillip "Ossie" Kairaiuak from the Yukon/Kuskokwim river delta. Band member Karina Moeller hails from Nuuk, Greenland.

"We wanted to break up the series of string bands that we had in the past few years and 'Pamyua' seemed like a great choice," said Carol Gales, the organizer of the 11th Midnight Sun Folk Fest.

"Pamyua" is no stranger to Nome, as a few members of the band came up to greet John Baker under the burled arch when he won the 2011 Iditarod sled dog race. "Their last performance in Nome, though, was in the 1990s," Gales said.

The band has been performing together for 15 years. The style is best described as traditional Yup'ik dance songs that underwent a bit of modernization. Handheld dance drums and voices are the core of the performances, and for a few songs, guitarist Ivan Night, bass player David Nathanson and drummer Cameron Cartland joined in. They dedicated songs to Native women inspired by Elizabeth Hensley's 2010 AFN keynote address and to Kallie King, Josie Stiles and Richard Beneville.

Dramatic and deep songs alternated with a healthy dose of humor. During one impressive performance of throat singing, Phillip Blanchett joked "Precious" alluding to Lord of the Rings character Gollum, which cracked up the audience.

At the end of the first set, Ossie Kairaiuak and Phillip Blanchett performed a humorous hunting dance of a seal hunt gone awry. A special treat came when the King Island Dancers joined Pamyua and drummed with them. "That was really special," said Carol Gales. "This was the first time that we had traditional music of the people from here perform their music at the Nome Folk Fest."

Pamyua continued on to an open jam session at Airport Pizza before calling it a night.

Saturday started bright and early with CAMP's Gold Dust Dash. Forty-six runners hit East End beach for the run to the Nome River mouth and back. Matt Froehle crossed the finish line first with a time of 26 minutes and 21 seconds, followed by Nils Hahn with 27 minutes and 32

Floats started to gather at the state building around 11 a.m. when it was time for the parade. The Nome Volunteer Fire and Ambulance Departments headed the parade of floats up and down Front Street. At the end, judges from the Nome Visitor Bureau judged the floats and handed out $100 as the Judge's choice winner to the Library kids, all dressed in yellow t-shirts and sombrero hats. The Bering Strait Regional Housing Authority won the category of best float representing the theme of "A Blast from the Past — memories from yesteryear." Pierce Goslin won $50 for riding the Best Bike, and Fred Moody's Model T won honorable mention.

As temperatures began to heat up, so did the tension in anticipation of the bank robbery. While hundreds of onlookers gathered in front of the Wells Fargo bank, the bank robbers came down Front Street, announced by shady ladies and cancan dancers. Ouickly, they held up the bank, came out with the loot. So far, this is what everybody expected. But then things deviated from the script and only choreographer Richard Beneville and a few select were sworn to secrecy of what was to come next. One of the villains, Ken Shapiro, commandeered the microphone, busted out a jewelry case and went down on one knee in front of Beatrice Buchholz to pop the question. Caught by surprise and totally off guard, Buchholz stammered "yes" and then tears of happiness were flowing. And when the loot was then officially surrendered to Nome's kids, the drama once again had a happy end.

Given the warm, sunny weather, and only a slight breeze, the Rotarians' Polar Bear Swim attracted a bunch of hardy souls who took to the Bering Sea.

The Nome Midnight Sun Folk Fest then had its final main stage event, with 21 local acts signed up and a 30minute performance of "Pamyua." Gales said that attendance might have been lower because of the nice summer weather but when the 2011 feature band hit the stage, the Nome Elementary School Commons filled up pretty quick and people stayed on to hear local favorites including Lance Johnson, Landbridge Tollbooth, Bonnie Hahn and Richard Beneville and the Hapless Creatures of Quiet Desperation Jug Band performing the Michael Jackson classic "Billie Jean."

Bering Strait region to be largest voter block in new House District 39

By Diana Haecker

Last week, the Alaska Redistricting Board sealed the deal and adopted the statewide redistricting plan as the final version. This leaves House District 39, which includes the Bering Strait and Nome area as the vastest district of all, stretching from St. Lawrence and Little Diomede islands in the west all the way to the Canadian border in the east, St. Michael in the southwest, Shishmaref in the Northwest and on the opposite end, including Arctic Village, Venetie and further south, McCarthy and Tok.

The final plan did not draw enthusiastic reactions from anybody. House District 39 Representative Neal Foster – along with all but one other representative – will be up for election next year. Foster said that the vastness of the new district makes it quite a challenge to run for office. "I am fortunate because I have my own airplane and don't depend on expensive charter flights to go to some of these remote places," Foster said. The old district of 28 rather large communities now will be including 60 communities with very small populations. "The biggest challenge for me will be to fully understand the concerns of all the villages," said Foster. Foster added that while advances in communication could make it easier for folks to communicate with him on their community's needs, it still doesn't replace visiting and becoming familiar with the places and their needs.

The upside for the Bering Strait region is that 55 percent of the voters in the new district 39 will be from the western Alaska and BSNC boundary area.

Trying to stay within existing House district boundaries, the Bering Straits Native Corporation – as well as Calista Corp.— submitted revised plans to the redistricting board. BSNC proposed to include Shishmaref to the north and further down south include Russian Mission.

Matt Ganley, BSNC's resources and external affairs vice president, said that BSNC has attended most meetings. "We have lobbied and lobbied to keep the district the same," Ganley said. "Our main argument was that the east-west district would not be a compact district in terms of history, culture and economic dynamics," Ganley explained. But the redistricting board had a tough task. In its proclamation report, the board said that it first focused on rural Alaska in order to build a non-retrogressive plan in compliance with the federal Voting Rights Act. "This was no easy task given the significant demographic changes of rural Alaska combined with the increased standard for the percentage of Alaska Native voting age population required create an effective Alaska Native district," reads the report.

Board members Marie Greene of Kotzebue and PeggyAnn Mc-Connochie of Juneau eventually created a plan that met federal Voting Rights Act requirements. The board had to make sure that the "one person, one vote" principle is satisfied. According to "one person, one vote," legislative seats must be based on population, and the populations of the respective legislative districts must be substantially equal.

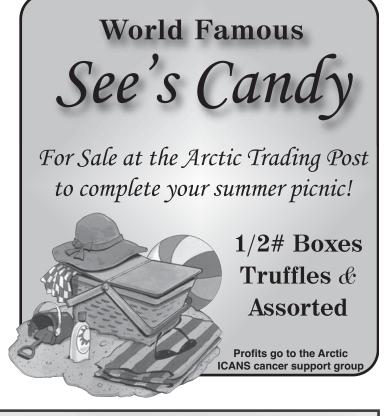

The 2010 census data showed a total statewide population of 710,231 people. Since the Alaska constitution mandates 40 House districts, the ideal size of a House District was determined to be 17,755. Now the board had to draw lines around those 17,755 people – give or take 10 percent.

Neal Foster said that he had mechanics ready to inspect his plane. "This summer, I'd like to start flying around the Interior and then drive to Tok to learn more about their communities," Foster said. Matt Ganley concluded that the new district 39 is not what BSNC would like it to be, but the situation is not as dire as it appears. "It's really a shame, but when the numbers are put through, we [the BSNC area] still have the majority of voters, but I'm concerned with the Ahtna people who are now divided and thrown in with the Bering Strait region," Ganley said. As of press time, there were no indications of legal challenges to the final redistricting plan.

House split, Senate united on special session for coastal zone management extension

By Diana Haecker

Still trying to salvage the state's only way for meaningful input in coastal zone management, Alaska legislators were polled on the willingness to go into special session to extend the program. A new poll on Friday showed that the Senate has the two-thirds majority to call a special session to extend the state's current coastal zone management for one year. Fifteen of 20 Senators were in favor of going into special session. The proposal was to only extend the program as is and this would not include any of the contentious changes proposed in the bills that were before legislators during the regular and the first special session. Senators said that this would give lawmakers time to work on a compromise.

The House Majority caucus, however, announced on Monday that the House is split on the issue and only 19 of the 40 Representatives were in favor of going back to Juneau to take up the extension again. It takes two-thirds of both legislative chambers to call themselves into special session.

House speaker Mike Chenault, R-Nikiski, said that the House leadership is willing to negotiate with the Senate on a compromise to save the program

House leaders scheduled a meeting with Senate leadership for Tuesday. The result of the meeting was not known by press time.

Olive oil helps prevent strokes

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Researchers have identified a new reason to love an ancient food. According to a study published last week in the journal Neurology, olive oil helps lower a person's risk for

The study focused on olive oil consumption among people living in several communities in France. Participants were divided into three basic categories based on olive oil consumption: no use; moderate use (only for cooking or as a dressing); and intensive use (use for both cooking and as a dressing).

Compared to people never use olive oil, people who use olive oil for cooking and as a dressing (intensive use) have a 41percent lower risk of stroke.

Furthermore, study participants with the highest blood levels of oleic acid, a marker of olive oil consumption, lowered their risk of stroke by 73

The positive effects of olive oil are likely related to its overall positive effect on the cardiovascular system. Olive oil is high in monounsaturated fats, unlike butter or animal fats, which are high in saturated fats. Saturated fats tend to clog arteries while monounsaturated oils like olive oil, help keep arteries clean.

Olive oil, especially extra virgin olive oil, is known to lower blood pressure, improve cholesterol, and act as an anti-inflammatory. Perhaps this is why ancient cultures used olive oil as a medication as well as a study acknowledge there may also be secondary health benefits to using olive oil. Olive oil is typically used with other healthy foods like vegetables or whole grain breads known to be good for the brain. Therefore, some of the reduction in stroke from olive oil consumption may be associated with the healthier lifestyle of people who use olive oil regularly.

Converting to olive oil is not difficult. Olive oil may be used in cooking, pan-frying, and baking where vegetable oil would normally be used, though some foods prepared with olive oil need to be cooked at a lower temperature due to olive oil's lower smoking point.

Mixed with herbs, pepper, and salt, olive oil makes a good dressing for salads or dip for whole grain

People who have a hard time getting away from butter may enjoy making and using olive butter. Olive butter is made by blending olive oil with equal parts melted butter. When cooled, olive butter takes on a softsolid consistency, which easily spreads on bread or crackers straight out of the refrigerator. Olive butter can be used as a step to increasing olive oil intake and decreasing but-

The new study on olive oil adds to the growing body of evidence that strokes, heart disease, and even diabetes can be prevented by daily physical activity and a healthy diet rich in vegetables, nuts, fish, and healthy oils.

On October 1, 2004 Yonsei University in South Korea held a farewell ceremony for the Underwood family, who would be parting for the state of New Jersey in America. This family first arrived at the Port of Incheon in Korea on 1 April 1885, which was Easter Sunday. For 120 years four generations of the Underwood family served as missionaries, performing many great

In 1886 Horace Underwood received permission to start a kindergarten school, but the Korean people did not look kindly upon this whiteskinned family. No students registered for an entire year, and bad rumors spread instead. However, the Underwood family never gave up in their efforts, and students began enrolling at the school. Afterward, the family started a college, medical school and a medical drug factory. They encouraged study abroad in the U.S. and Europe, especially in the science and medical fields. The Underwood family never were disappointed or afraid of their mission tasks toward the Korean people.

My family has a debt to this family, since because of them my grandparents, parents and nuclear family accepted the Gospel of Jesus Christ. In April 2008 my wife and I were traveling in New York and had the chance to meet a fourth-generation Underwood. During my pastoral time in a church in New York, my daughter got a job at the Department of Forensic Science and my son a job in a big law firm. We soon learned that the Native people's DNA is very similar to that of Koreans. During church potlucks my wife brings Korean food, such as rice, kimchi, seaweed salad and traditional beef. #### Sid Cone

Sid Cone, 70, a fearless and restless adventurer who was willing to try anything, drowned on June 11, while dredging for gold offshore at He was born Sidney Lawrence Cone on September 23, 1940 to Joe and Janiel Williams Cone of Kila, Montana. Sid's early years were spent in the Ashley Creek School area and in or near Vancouver, Washington for four years during WWII where his parents worked in the Kaiser Ship Yards. After the war the family returned to the Ashley Creek area where Sid attended grades 1 - 6, then a year each at Fortine and Olney. He went to high school in Eureka, Montana and while there he joined a local boxing club. Besides local matches, he fought in the Inland Empire Golden Gloves Tournament in Spokane, Washing-

Sid always had a keen ear for music. He could pick up any musical instrument and before long was picking out a tune. He and his piano playing sister Sharon, played for dances at local grange halls and community centers.

Sid's first "real" job was at Alby's studmill in Eureka where he along shifts and stacked hay at a ranch during the day for room and board. He later worked as a ranch hand in

He later worked as a ranch hand in the Big Hole Valley. In 1961 he became a deputy game warden in Alaska. He then became an Assistant Chief of Police in Cordova, Alaska. From there he joined the Marine Corps where he spent time overseas including Okinawa and the Philippines and during that time was on various ships including the carrier Princeton. In 1964 he was on a winning Marine Corps track team and was selected, along with his team members, to carry the Olympic torch.

After his stint in the Marines, he became a commercial fisherman. He began on a tuna boat out of San Diego, California and later worked on various other boats fishing for salmon and halibut.

Sid's varied work history went on to include logging jobs in Montana, Idaho, Washington and Arizona for companies including Canyon Logging of Columbia Falls and Lyle Doty logging of Kalispell. He also drove truck in the oil fields of Eastern Montana and North Dakota.

In 1986, Sid returned to school and earned an Associate's Degree

State of Alaska went to a quota system for halibut fishing, Sid and many other smaller fishermen were forced out.

Sid returned to the lower 48 in the early '90's. He went to truck driving school in Arizona, then began driving long haul truck for Don Williams Trucking in Washington, A&A Trucking in Kalispell, Interstate Distributing in Seattle and Watkins-Shepherd Trucking out of Missoula. Sid officially retired in 2007, but his love for Alaska continued to pull him back.

Sid was always a voracious reader and through his own self-study into world's religions became an active member of Missoula's chapter of Nicherin Buddhism.

Never one to turn down an opportunity, Sid began spending his summers in Nome mining for gold; his last true passion.

Sid was preceded in death by his parents and a nephew Jason Cone. He is survived by his best friend and older brother Rod Cone (Cindy) from Missoula, his sister Sharon Catlow (Craig) from Spokane Washington, his nephew Joe Cone from Missoula, niece Laurie Doty from Seattle, Washington, niece Carrie Doty and her children Brock and Mark Jason from Great Falls, niece Pam Doty Young from Dallas, Texas and former brother-in-law and friend, Lyle Doty from Conrad.

1000 cranes:

An artist in a rural village builds suicide awareness by folding paper

By Dawnell Smith

A young man drowns in a village. We read about it and shake our heads. People drown all the time. We get used to it. People kill themselves all the time. Statistics shadow us like biting insects. We carry on. What does that mean-to "get used to it" or "carry on?"

A young man drowned in St. Michaels last week. Children, adults, visitors watched as others searched for him. A visiting artist teaching summer school, Leslie Kimiko Ward felt "the collective agony as they pulled his body from the lake." She questioned her place in a village she had only begun to know. She was there to teach dance and drumming, the thumping of life and creation.

Harder still, Ward heard from a teacher who worried about how the loss would impact the rest of the village of 350. Three people had already killed themselves during the school year, and despair, isolation and hopelessness follow. A tragedy can beget a tragedy, "like the aftershocks that follow an earthquake," said Ward.

So she started folding one thousand paper cranes for the village to "stave off my helpless feelings and create something beautiful in the wake of what had happened."

And she emailed her parents. Her father responded to her email, "telling me of a parable that was given at the funeral services held this week for my great uncle Bill, a practicing Buddhist. The monk overseeing the services told the story of an oyster, and how it takes a grain of sand, a source of irritation and pain, and turns it over and over until it creates a pearl. The parable reminds us that out of something painful can come something beautiful."

So she decided to share her feelings, reach out, connect, and inspire a simple act of creativity that forged an ever-expanding gift of communal compassion and understanding. The resulting Facebook page, "1000 Cranes in Alaska," is meant to build awareness about loss and suicide, and about how grief and despair can seep through our communities and deepen our sense of disconnection.

The page with a tutorial on how to make paper cranes gained over 100 followers in one day, with postings and images of people holding their own paper cranes—kids from the village, kids from the Children's Healing Art Project in Oregon, people from Washington and Georgia, people with paper cranes on fingertips, in sand, on plants, in the hands of the people who made them.

The significance of the "thousand cranes" originates in the story of Japanese girl Sadako Sasaki, who folded cranes in an attempt to stave off her death from leukemia as a result of radiation from Hiroshima, said Ward. The idea is that the completion of the task yields a wish for the folder. The thousand cranes also serve as a symbol for world peace.

It turns out that the kids in St. Michaels knew the story of Sadako Sasaki. After seeing pictures of cranes posted on the Facebook page, they folded cranes beyond the end of the school day, and took home tiny piles of coloring goals of the CDQ groups can put them in direct opposition to the economic, social and cultural interests of their rural Alaska stakeholders. The decennial review should identify the areas where these conflicts occur, how they have been resolved and quantitatively assess outcomes for the CDQ groups and rural Alaska residents.

The following comments primarily relate to NSEDC, the CDQ group I am most familiar with but I have heard from numerous residents of other CDQ program eligible communities that the same situation is widespread.

In Norton Sound, NSEDC has become a de facto monopoly, dominating all fisheries related economic activity and impacting many segments of the society and culture including the subsistence economy.

In my personal experience, NSEDC has become an oppressive monopoly. Ironically, I have been forced out of fisheries related economic activities by the program that was created specifically for the purpose of developing self-sustaining fisheries related economies in this region.

At best, it is difficult to engage in any kind of business where a near-monopoly exists; for me it has been impossible. Unfortunately, neither the MSA nor the state and federal laws governing the CDQ program contain provisions for prohibiting the CDQ groups from engaging in unfair competition to the detriment of coastal community residents. The need for additional rule-making to minimize these negative consequences of the CDQ program should be addressed in the decennial review.

Furthermore, there are no mechanisms in the governance structures of the CDQ groups for resolving conflicts. CDQ groups are privately owned non-profit corporations with no members. In addition, some if not all of them have moved a substantial portion of their assets into for-profit subsidiaries in which their community residents are not shareholders.

The residents of coastal communities have none of the statutory protections or rights provided to members by the Alaska Nonprofit Corporation Act or the rights provided to corporate shareholders by the Business and Industrial Development Act.

CDQ groups and their subsidiaries are not regulated by the SEC and are exempt from the shareholder protections provided by the Sarbanes-Oxley Act.

Most troubling is that the CDQ groups are not accountable to the residents.

Most troubling is that the CDQ groups are not accountable to the residents of the communities they represent and their financial records are held confidential. The residents of NSEDC's communities cannot see audited financial statements for the nonprofit and even the NSEDC board of directors is denied access to detailed financial records of NSEDC's for-profit subsidiaries.

Prior to 2006, the council along with the State of Alaska and the National Marine Fisheries Service provided substantial regulatory oversight over the business activities of the CDQ groups. The 2006 amendments to Magnuson-Stevens Act privatized the CDQ groups and today they are controlled by a very small number of individuals without a clearly codified relationship to their stakeholders. There are no other corporations similar to the CDQ groups, no precedents for how they are supposed to work and little quantitative information except from the CDQ industry on how they are working.

The council was a major player in creating and overseeing the CDQ program. Because of the importance of the program to western Alaska communities and Bering Sea and Aleutian Islands fisheries, I hope that the council will actively participate in the decennial review by assigning staff to participate in designing, implementing, conducting and analyzing the review to ensure that it is thorough, objective and comprehensive.

ful paper so that they could teach their families and friends how to make them.

The cranes look different, some tidy and some rough. Some plain, others adorned. They are not individually art, really, but collectively they say something. They speak to humanity, perhaps, or the possibility of creating a new cycle.

Not one of loss, but of creation. Not one of isolation, but of solidarity. Those of us who have lost friends and family members, leaders and visionaries, to suicide, know how it threads through what we do, what we believe, what we expect. In some small, strange and simple way, 1000 Cranes for Alaska begins a new thread.

Make a crane. Take a picture. Check it out.

And yet, I am amazed always at the way things are going. They say that in 2010 Alaska's resources grossed 4.2 billion dollars. So how does that help us Alaskans? And why are we paying such outrageous prices? How do we benefit?

Do you know that we can barely afford to feed our families, much less afford tissue and other essentials, and they plan to raise the cost of everything? Then they are saying you (as a town or region) can only hunt this many animals and catch this much fish, so how do we feed our families? Much less afford gas. How did we benefit from that $4.2 billion?

Then our corporation (the one holding the stakes on our gas and oil pumps) says that as of June 1 people can no longer charge. Our ancestors started our corporation knowing that eventually hard times would fall on us, so they wanted our corporation to be able to sustain our community during that time. So are they? The people they should be cutting off are the companies that owe them a lot of money already, along with the people who are not making the payments that they can/should be making. After all, it is supposed to be a privilege for us.

Anyway, hi everyone. Hope you all have a good, safe, productive summer. God bless each and every one of you.

Don't forget—the Elders sure do miss doing things like picking greens/berries, and fishing so don't forget to include them when you do things like that by giving them some.

As always, Karen Nanouk

Notice of Public Hearings

In accordance with National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA) requirements, the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management, Regulation and Enforcement will hold public hearings June 21–29 to accept comments on a Revised Draft Supplemental Environmental Impact Statement (SEIS) for Chukchi Sea Oil and Natural Gas Lease Sale 193, held in February 2008.

Lease Sale 193 was challenged in court by a coalition of environmental groups and Alaska Native organizations. On July 21, 2010, the Alaska District Court remanded the sale back to BOEMRE with a specific set of concerns related to the Environmental Impact Statement prepared prior to the sale. The bureau drafted the SEIS to address these concerns, and then revised the draft to incorporate a new analysis of a hypothetical Very Large Oil Spill scenario.

BOEMRE is accepting public comments on the Revised Draft SEIS through July 11, 2011. These comments will be considered when the bureau prepares the Final SEIS and a Record of Decision regarding the lease sale.

Property tax increase drops to 43 percent

By Sandra L. Medearis

Citing public reaction to a jump in property tax and a willingness to dip into savings to balance the general fund budget, the Nome Common Council lowered its earlier adopted 12-mill property tax rate to 10 mills June 27.

The Council received a budget based on 16 mills earlier in the funding process, then cut it to 10 mills, but lifted it back to 12 mills to leave more in savings. That meant a 71 percent increase in property taxes. This caught property owners' attention

Councilman Jerald Brown cautioned that with savings nearly exhausted, the reprieve and return to 10 mills was temporary, for the mill rate would sustain a severe raise next year. For now, the City will take some of the shortfall from a Public Employees Retirement System reserve.

This action reduces the property tax available to fund the $9.97 million general fund spending plan by approximately half a million dollars. In terms closer to home, at the 10-mill rate, a person owning property assessed at $100,000 would get a bill for $1,000 not the $1,200 due on a 12-mill rate, and not the $700 he paid at last year's mill rate of 7 mills.

For the 2011 budget, the Council chose to supplement the budget from savings to keep the mill rate low. That got the Council into trouble with property owners who were not prepared to pay the 12-mill rate set by Council on June 15 to avoid a

State takes over Public Health Nursing in Nome

By Diana Haecker

Norton Sound Health Corporation will officially turn over the operations of the Public Health Nursing center back to the State on July 1. According to Rhonda Richtsmeier, the Chief of Public Health Nursing with the State of Alaska, this should not impact the public as the services stay the same. She said that public health nurses that were employed by NSHC—and chose to apply for the jobs at PHN - become state employees.

Public Health Nursing provides immunizations, child health checks and infectious disease control. They give out flu or other epidemic information and run injury and obesity prevention programs. Two of the nurses also travel throughout the region and provide services in the villages. This, Richtsmeier said, would not change

There are 23 public health centers in the state. Four of them are administered by other entities. NSHC ran PHN in the Norton Sound area for 30 years. Manilaaq in Kotzebue, the North Slope Borough and the Municipality of Anchorage are the other three entities that run PHN facilities.

Richtsmeier said that these four entities are awarded grants by the State Division of Public Health to help provide the services in their region. "Over the years, the grant amount stayed the same, but last year there was a $250,000 increase in grant money," Richtsmeier said. She added that NSHC decided that the cost to run

Auto Repair. The case has been assigned to Judge Paul A. Roetman and moved to Kotzebue.

The action came on June 9, after Gater's name appeared on a preliminary list of defense witnesses that attorney Ted Stepovich filed in court June 8. Stepovich also listed the names of Judge Ben Esch, Josie Banke, city manager, Larry and Kay Carter, owners of Larry's Auto Repair, Joy Baker, harbormaster, Conner Thomas and Bob Lewis, both attorneys, John Earthman, district attorney, Marsha Tobuk, Dennis Bahnke, Diana Adams, Loretta Bullard and Jason M. (or Sonny) Song, taxi driver. Stepovich represents Larry and Kay Carter, owners of the vehicle repair shop at Belmont Street and Seppala Drive, across the street from vacant City land controlled by Port of Nome.

A jury trial on the court calendar for six days beginning Oct. 10 will still occur in Nome, according to court staff. The issue concerns roughly $6,000 that the City says the business owes for its customers parking cars on port property for several years. The Carters say they do not owe the money, that they had no lease on the property after 2005, and that the City did nothing to diminish its injury: The City did not seek relief from third parties who parked on the property.

Coastal management compromise bill dies in House, Governor promised kiss of death

By Diana Haecker

In the second day of the second special session of the Alaska Legislature, the House of Representatives let the Alaska Coastal Management program die with a vote of 18 yays and 18 nays. For the bill to survive, it would have needed 21 yes votes. The reason, a House majority deputy press secretary Jeremiah Campbell said on Tuesday afternoon, is that most Representatives felt that the program was too close to the closedown process with only five of the original 33 state employees who managed the program still being on the job. Governor Sean Parnell signaled that he would veto the bill. In a speech at the Resource Development Council on Tuesday, Parnell said that too few staff remain on the job to process ACMP applications and that reviving the program would cost the oil or mining industry jobs. He expressed the same to legislators.

In an attempt to save the Alaska Coastal Management program, the Alaska legislature called itself into second special session on Monday. Within a day, the Senate passed a compromise bill that extends the coastal management program for another six years and that would have created an Alaska coastal policy board.

The amended bill addressed the two points of contention that caused a rift between the House and Senate in the first session. One resolution was to remove all refer-

OPINION

Senator Donald Olson Senate District T

A couple of weeks ago, the Alaska Redistricting Board adopted its final plan for the redistricting of Alaska's legislative districts by a unanimous 5-0 vote and issued its Proclamation of Redistricting, as mandated by the Alaska Constitution.

Honestly, like several other legislators, I'm pretty astonished with the new district lines in our district and statewide as well. The new redistricting boundaries show dramatic changes and this poses questions and concerns of continuity and fair representation.

For more than 10 years since I've been Senator for District T, I've served House Districts 39 and 40 which stretch up and down the western coast of Alaska and across the north coast of the Arctic. The majority of these communities have been predominantly Inupiat and Yup'ik villages, with several common cultural ways and community related issues in common.

With the new district lines, Senate District T will encompass the upper portion of Alaska, including Nunivak Island and curving around the Fairbanks North Star Borough and down the eastern end of the state down past

McCarthy. Many of the communities in this new district will include communities along the upper Yukon River including the Athabascan villages of Fort Yukon down to Kaltag. The new district will also include communities along the Dalton Highway including some towns on the Richardson Highway including the Tok Junction area.

Although I was expecting little change, particularly to our district, I understand the Redistricting Board decided on their final plan in regards to compliance with the Federal Voting Rights Act which required the configuration of House Districts 34, 36, 37, 38 and 39 in order to avoid retrogression. While current Senate District T is made up of largely similar communities with a consistent cultural and economic base, the new districts would have extremely varied cultural and economic values. Currently, our district consists of offroad communities. The new plan would change this to combine both the off-road communities and those communities who rely heavily on the road system.

I'd like to point out that the new redistricting map is not completely set in stone for the next ten years. In conformity with the constitutional requirement, the state has 90 days to accept challenges to the proposed plan. So far, the Fairbanks North Star Borough Assembly recently met and voted 8-1 to submit a resolution to officially challenge the State of Alaska's proposed redistricting plan. Let's hope the courts will reconsider challenges brought forth and reject the new redistricting layout.

Regardless of the new district lines, I will continue to work diligently to push for fair representation for all of our rural Alaskan communities and won't forget the people and needs in our current district. Even though the new boundaries may seem to be a threat creating more polarization within districts, if we keep in mind we are all in this together, we can overcome this obstacle and reach sensible and reasonable representation for all Alaskans.

Once the final plan is official, the Redistricting Board's adopted districts will be implemented for legislative elections in the year 2012, and thereafter, until a valid Redistricting Plan has been adopted following the next decennial census. Maps and other information can be found at http://www.akredistricting.org/.

Roosters

We need term limits. There is a reason why many states and even the federal government impose term limits on elected officials. There is a tendency to roost. Officials can be in office so long they claim ownership. They also like to keep doing things the way they have always been done. That may be good or bad, but it does get stale.

The problem with roosters is that their presence can be intimidating and discourages others from seeking office. Of course the roosters are not fully at fault, persons who are indifferent to the way things happen reap what they sew. These are the folks who wait until the fertilizer is knee deep until they start to squawk. We also need to insure that elected officials do not serve or get appointed to advisory boards that seek policy approval from the other official body they represent (a city council person sitting on a planning or port commission seeking approval from city council).

Term limits would bring about better government, fresher ideas and more public involvement. Look at how many of our elected officials have been in office for years and years and years. It can't help be a burden on the elected official, they probably would not mind term limits. It is time to take stock and have concerned and caring citizens step forward and take part in the Democratic process to promote good, open and transparent government. - N.L.M.-

Lawmakers go into special session

In the eleventh hour, lawmakers decided to go into special session to rescue the coastal zone management program from expiring on June 30. House speaker Mike Chenault announced Friday afternoon that the House had enough votes to meet with the Senate to consider the reauthorization of the Alaska Coastal Management program. The Alaska Constitution requires a two-thirds vote of the Legislature to call itself into special session. The session was scheduled to begin on Monday at 11 a.m. in Juneau.

Lawsuit brews over redistricting

Unhappy about the redistricting plan that would put the Fairbanks communities of Ester and Goldstream with the gigantic House district 39, Tim Beck, a Fairbanks North Star Borough assembly member, proposed last week to legally challenge the plan. The assembly mulled over a resolution presented by Beck saying that the North Star borough was entitled to 5.5 house seats and 2.75 senate seats. It goes on to say that the proposed redistricting plan violates the state constitutional standards of compactness, contiguity and socio-economic integration. Under the plan, Ester and a large part of the Goldstream Valley would join the district that stretches from the BSNC region's Little Diomede all the way to Canada. Democrats are also weighing their options to sue.

Earthquake hits Aleutians

On Thursday evening, a 7.2 earthquake hit the Aleutian Islands. A tsunami warning was issued and residents of Unalaska and Dutch Harbor fled to higher ground. The quake was centered about 122 miles east of Atka, about 1,200 miles southwest of Anchorage. No damage was reported. The West Coast and Alaska Tsunami Warning Center posted a tsunami warning for some coastal areas of Alaska, but canceled the warning about an hour after the quake. The warning covered an area from 80 miles northeast of Dutch Harbor to about 125 miles west of Adak.

Man run over by car in Gay Parade

During Saturday's Pridefest's Celebrating Diversity Parade" in Anchorage, a man was killed when he was run over by a vehicle being driven in the parade. Anchorage resident James Crump, 50, was struck by a 1971 Triumph Stag convertible carrying Doug Frank, the grand master of the Pridefest Parade. Neither the driver of the vehicle, Edith Bailey, 70, of Eagle River, nor Doug Frank were hurt. Anchorage police officers attempted to revive James Crump using CPR but he was declared deceased at the scene. Parade organizers immediately cancelled the parade in response to the tragedy. James Crump was a registered nurse at the Anchorage Department of Health and Human Services. Investigators from the APD Traffic Unit are continuing this investigation.

Tug sinks in Bering Sea east off St. Paul Island

A tug pulling a barge loaded with construction equipment sank 100 miles east of St. Paul Island. Four crew members of the tugboat survived and made it to the barge. They were rescued from the barge by a Coast Guard helicopter. The barge was secured and a vessel sent out to retrieve the barge. APRN reports the tug is owned by C&K Marine in Anchorage and sank carrying 29,000 gallons of diesel fuel. The cause of the sinking has not yet been determined.

47 sign up for Iditarod

Nome musher Aaron Burmeister and four-time Iditarod champion Jeff King were among the first 47 mushers to sign up for the 2012 Iditarod Trail sled dog race. Last Saturday mushers had the first crack at signing up for the 40th Iditarod during the annual volunteer picnic in Wasilla. Four-time champs Lance Mackey and Martin Buser signed up, Denali musher Jeff King came out of retirement, as did Burmeister after a two-year hiatus. The 2011 champion John Baker and 2004 champ Mitch Seavey also signed up. Wasilla musher Kelley Griffin and Martin Buser won their entry fees of $3,000 back during the annual drawing.

issue affects them. People also addressed the AP regarding chum bycatch.

Main messages communicated to the Council by local stakeholders:

- (Chum) salmon are vitally important to the Bering Sea inhabitants as food:
- (Chum) salmon are an integral part of local culture;
- (Chum) salmon are a means to support the local economy;

•(Chum) salmon are a source of healthy living;

• (Chum) salmon are a vital part of the food chain; and • Tribes should have a formal presence (seats) on the Council. Ultimately, the Council elected to postpone the decision on how to handle the Chum Salmon Bycatch issue until a later date. They requested their staff to revise their analysis and present again to the Council. Both Chum and Chinook bycatch seem to drastically affect the subsistence lifestyle of coastal Alaskans. Salmon bycatch increased in the mid-2000's, reaching a record high of 120,000 Chinook and 700.000 Chum. While these numbers are not typical during the course of a year, subsistence users indicate that they are being affected by small salmon runs that do not provide adequate fish for food and traditional cultural lifestyles. Tribal leaders have called for seats on the Council and for protection of subsistence activities

No chair was vacant when the Council held a public hearinggrumbling session—June 22 on the 12-mill rate. Those who took the podium said the increase was too

Property values are clearly going down and foreclosures abound, Judy Martinson, owner of multiple properties, said. In Alaska, state law dictates assessed value must equal market value. But yet, "all along for three years our property valuation has gone up. Now the mill rate goes up," Martinson said. "Who has the cash reserves? This hit us in the Mike Quinn conceded that he had not read the budget, that he depended on the Council.

"I elect you guys. If you're good, I keep quiet. If not, I'm here. Seems like a 71 percent increase is poor management," something a business could not get away with, Quinn said.

Between a rock and a hard spot, i.e., needing to cover City services and payroll but trying to appease property owners, the Council begged for suggestions for cutting expenses.

Martinson had suggestions: Decrease building and construction, watch in-house building expenditures, annex the out-of-town areas where the City's power lines take service. Raise the sales tax in the summer to get help from visitors.

Barb Nickels had suggestions: cut the budget for heavy equipment and use equipment sitting idle in town; get rid of buildings that are not paying for themselves and stop waiving user fees in buildings. Turn off the ice machine that runs 24/7 in the Mini Convention Center for starters, then weather strip the doors where there are two inches of daylight all around them. Nickels, employed with Nome Chamber of Commerce, lobbied for continued operation of the Mini Convention Center on River Street. The building will stay open. Councilwoman Mary Knodel asked that the public works department go over the building to see where expenses could be pared from energy control and the like. Additionally, fee waivers for use of the center will be reduced.

Sgt. Andrew Merrill, AST, cautioned that people like his single-income family would be leaving because Nome's high cost of living made other areas where they could move much more attractive.

Perhaps funding quality of life services —swimming pool, library or museum-would have to cease, Councilman Stan Andersen sug-

Andersen said he had expected people to come to the work session with ideas.

"We can't renegotiate wages without support," Andersen said. "We're nailed in.'

City buildings are not self-supporting, so—"Partner with people who have buildings already," Sue Greenly said. "If I were running my household like the City, I'd have gone broke a long time ago.

The Council amended the mill rate to 10 with only Jerald Brown voting against the measure. Brown has maintained that adopting a rate under 12 mills would be irresponsible and lead to sticker shock next year when the property tax rate would have to zoom upward.

The Council met with Steve Van Sant, state tax assessor the week of June 20 to discuss ways to raise revenues. Van Sant was to perform an audit of the City's property tax assessments and review the City's sales tax and personal property tax programs. He will be issuing a report after auditing City fundraising prac-

In other business at its regular meeting June 24, the Council:

- · Adopted a City of Nome 2012 capital projects fund budget for $2.153 million.
- · Adopted a City of Nome special revenue fund budget for $163,752. Money for this budget comes from sources other than the City of Nome. · Adopted a Port of Nome budget for $1,556,391. Before approval, the Council ejected $411,000 earmarked for heavy equipment. Andersen tried to get $250,000 from the port for utility costs, saying the port was making money and should shoulder its expenses. "They are making enough money; they should be sharing some of their profit with us," he said. Josie Bahnke, city manager, and finance office Cussy Kauer played DEE-fense for the port budget, saying that the Port of Nome has substantial projects underway and heavy obligation. "Can we ease into this with not so much this year?" Councilwoman Mary Knodel asked. Bahnke said she would prefer the finances be investigated and not the arbitrary amount set for utility contribution. Brown suggests the port group justify their fund balance, and "what you can't justify or we don't agree with, we'll take.'
- · Adopted a City of Nome 2012 construction capital projects fund budget
- · Named the following parties as having authority to sign checks or warrants against City of Nome accounts: Mary Knodel, Stan Andersen, Randy Pomeranz, all Council members; Denise Michels, mayor; Josephine H. Bahnke, city manager; and Vanessa Musich, city clerk. All depository pledge agreements, orders for payment, warrants or checks
- must have two signatures. Authorized Bahnke to enter into an agreement with Colby Carter to assist with maintenance and operation of the City's emergency communications equipment. The term of the agreement is one year at an hourly fee of $75 per hour with appropriate insurance.

- · Authorized a contract with Wendy Chamberlain of Legislative Consultants of Alaska as lobbyist at last year's amount-$75,000 for fivemonths.—and same terms as last year. Bahnke suggested the Council amend the agreement to require a notification in writing from Chamberlain when there is a conflict of interest between results sought by Nome and results sought by another entity Chamberlain represents. Council agreed.
- · Authorized a contract for planning services with Eileen Bechtol of Bechtol Planning and Development for $60 per hour as needed, with a budgeted cap at $20,000.
- Authorized a health reimbursement arrangement to repay eligible employees for part of their insurance deductible as regards medical costs. A new insurance option the City took to save $163,000 raises the deductible to $2,000 for an employee and $4,000 for a family. The employee will continue to pay $500 of the deductible. The City and the employee would be able to list their parts of the expense with the IRS at tax time. The number of employees affected and the amounts the City would pay were not immediately available to be able to calculate the net savings.

 Authorized an agreement with Alaska Dept. of Public Safety for dispatch services for $5,000 quarterly, $20,000 annually. In return, City of Nome would provide dispatch services for the troopers after hours and on weekends. Approved an agreement between City of Nome and Amy E. Smithheisler to provide animal control services. Smithheisler will receive $3,600 per month, an increase of $300 per month and a fee schedule for animal capture during working and after hours, and a euthanasia fee. Smithheisler has performed the animal control service since 2002.

- Clarified the cost of the mayor's car that is really the "City Hall car," according to Bahnke. It cost around $35,000 landed, not $60,000, as reported. "I just threw that $60,000 out to see if anyone would vote against it, and no one did," Andersen said.
- Received a written report from Denise Michels, mayor, on attendance at Arctic Imperative Summit in Girdwood with a copy of her presentation of Nome as a short-term solution for an Arctic access port. The City has asked Congress for help in assisting the U.S. Coast Guard and that they consider Nome for a site of seasonal operation.
- · Appointed Jeff Darling and Johnny Bahnke to the Port Commission.
- Started its June 27 meeting with the swearing in of new Nome Police Department Officer Matthew Schwier.
- Ended the meeting with thanking Cussy Kauer, finance department, for her work in putting together the budget and its many revisions.

Public may have to pay more to keep services

By Sandra L. Medearis

The City has adopted next year's general fund spending plan for over $9.97 million. The budget draws from sources including taxes, user fees. State of Alaska revenue sharing, and payments in lieu of taxes.

The budget reveals Nome Common Council's adherence to legally required services and its philosophy on discretionary spending of public money in satisfying the public's demand for services beyond the legal

City or state law demands that the City contribute to schools and police department, but City of Nome goes beyond the requirements to provide additional amenities, Councilman Stan Andersen told the public in a recent budget meeting. These can increase or be cut back according to revenue available.

essential 18 percent for police, 21 percent for public works or 8 percent for the City's administrative costs at City Hall.

To continue the current level of services, Nome residents may have to dig deeper, perhaps by paying increased sales tax and user fees. The Council will be looking at fees and rate schedules.

Councilman Randy Pomeranz said he agreed with cuts that had been made, but he favored putting a 6 percent sales tax on the fall ballot. The current rate is 5 percent.

"Let's see where the public wants to go with this," Pomeranz said. "To keep a good staff, we have to compensate them. A mill rate is a guarantee for us.

"It is there, no matter how loud the public cries. It is an unfair burden for property owners," he said.

Andersen applauded the idea of putting the sales tax to a vote, "but I won't be voting for it," he said. "I feel we haven't made an honest effort to look at the budget and see where we can cut."

• Public Health Nursing -

Public Health Service is too high to provide the service and that they couldn't afford it any longer. According to NSHC's CEO and president Carol Piscoya, the funding provided by the grant has not kept pace with the cost of providing services, requiring NSHC to supplement funding for the program. "Returning PHN services to State operation will allow NSHC to focus its funding and efforts on other patient care programs," Piscoya said.

According to Richtsmeier, NSHC received a $877,000 grant to run PHN for FY 2011.

The legislature appropriated $400,000 for the added cost to the state to run the service in Nome. Richtsmeier explained that the added $400,000 is going to pay for employees' wages, travel and to lease the building that the Nome PHN office is currently housed in. NSHC notified the state of their intention to discontinue providing PHN services in April 2010, effective July 1, 2011.

"During the last year we worked together so that there would be a smooth transition," Richtsmeier said.

She said that so far, two public health nurses remain on board, and that two positions are still open to be filled.

Richtsmeier said there would be just small changes, like in job titles. The director's position title changes to lead public health nurse. The lead nurse will report to a regional manager, who manages Southwest Alaska and now also "adopted" the Norton Sound region.

Testimony stirs NPFMC to seek solution to region's depressed chum runs

By Laurie McNicholas

The collective testimony of western Alaskans from communities dependent on chum salmon who described how the scarcity of the resource is affecting them packed a wallop at the North Pacific Fishery Management Council meeting early this month in Nome. This was the council's first Nome meeting.

In a state where the Chinook salmon is glorified and sockeye is the big money fish for commercial salmon harvesters, the council now knows that chum is the bread-and-butter fish in western Alaska, especially among subsistence users.

As Teller's Joe Garnie told the council, "We use chum for barter, for dog food and for dinner." Garnie raises and races sled dogs.

The council took testimony on an initial environmental and socio-economic analysis of the impacts of chum salmon bycatch in the Bering Sea pollock fishery June 11 at the Mini Convention Center. The analysis evaluated proposed management alternatives for minimizing chum bycatch in the Bering Sea pollock fishery. The council and the National Marine Fisheries Service together manage fisheries in federal waters from three to 200 miles off Alaska.

Here are some quotes from council members after about six hours listening to public comments at the meeting.

"We need to encourage a multifaceted approach to restoring chum to western Alaska," said Duncan Fields of Kodiak. He said he would talk about additional outreach to and consultation with western Alaskans at a staff tasking session on the last day of the meeting. He urged those in the audience to indicate whether additional opportunities to interface with the council would be helpful.

"There is no substitute for the heartfelt testimony we've heard today," said Dan Hull of Anchorage.

"The most enjoyable part for me was to hear the comments today," said Sam Cotten of Eagle River.

"I sincerely appreciate the public participation at this meeting," said John Henderschedt of Anchorage. "It was excellent testimony, compelling testimony. I hope the exchange can continue."

Bill Tweit of the Washington Dept. of Fish and Wildlife said he appreciates that the council was able to schedule a meeting in Nome and get this level of input. He noted that the council's Science and Statistical Committee and Advisory Panel had called for changes in the analysis that are responsive to the public comment the council heard at the meeting. He said the council will hone in on ways to meet the needs of western Alaskans and the pollock fleet and allow the pollock fleet to do the best job it can do to avoid chum. This is of critical importance to the people of western Alaska during chum scarcity, he added.

At the end of the day, the council unanimously adopted a motion by Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game Commissioner Cora Campbell that revised and restructured the management measures to be evaluated. The council's News & Notes (June 2011 edition) summarizes changes in alternatives and options as follows:

- "An additional option for a separate hard cap for June and July when western Alaskan chum stocks are more prevalent in the bycatch. [See accompanying pie chart.] If reached, this cap would close all fishing for Bering Sea pollock until August 1.
- "Removal from consideration complicated monthly area management options and triggers (formerly Alternative 3)
- "Additional provisions to the Rolling Hotspot Program for area closures based on historical bycatch proportion (60 percent and 80 percent) to which the fleet would be subject regardless of RHS participation.
- "Analysis of additional parameters of the RHS system that could be adjusted by the council to improve program performance."

The council also asked that the analysis be revised per their requests and come back for another initial review in early 2012, reported Nicole Kimball, fishery analyst for the council in an email following the meeting. "The council also noted, in staff tasking, that it will convene another Rural Community Outreach Committee meeting this year (timing to be determined), and that the committee should discuss whether and what type of further community outreach is needed on this issue," Kimball added.

Testimony the council heard

Following are excerpts and summaries of testimony presented to the council by Nome area residents who have faced depressed chum runs and restricted harvests for more than 20 years, and by residents of other communities in the region. Space limitations prevent The Nome Nugget from publishing comments of many other western Alaskans who impressed the council.

Dan Karmun of Nome. Elders are living longer with help from Norton Sound Health Corp. community health aides and services from Kawerak, Inc. Our elders in each village require all kinds of fish to be available. Organizations use big nets to get their money's worth and take our fish away from us. I hope each of you realize elders in villages need that fish to survive.

Karmun's granddaughter Marie Tozier told council members Karmun taught future subsistence users how to cut and dry 150 seined pink salmon at fish camp where four generations of his family were gathered. At first she told her daughters not to get their dresses dirty while helping with the catch, but soon they were carrying pinks in their skirts to cutting tables. She said a bright silver chum had to be returned to the water because the run was weak.

Fields introduced himself to Karmun and Tozier and chatted with them during a break in testimony.

Charlie Fitka, Native Village of St. Michael. I originally came from the Yukon River. We traditionally lived at fish camp and put up all of our fish all summer long. We got into commercial fishing and lived a good life. Earning $20,000 to $30,000 a year kept us out of welfare. Now we don't make enough money to cover gas. They gave us disaster relief—$4,000. How are we going to live on that? Gas and stove oil at St. Michael costs $10 a gallon. We don't want to see this happening all over. We'd like to see a bycatch cap of 30,000 chum salmon put on the pollock industry.

Charles Saccheus, Sr., Native Village of Elim. I am 71 years old and have been fishing for chum and other salmon in Norton Sound for 56 years. As a young man I learned how to catch and put away salmon by helping my parents hang and preserve fish. My father would work on his salmon nets all winter long and then in mid-June we would set the net. Between June 10 and the end of the month people would get 150-200 chum salmon a day! These days we are lucky to get just 15 or 20 a day. Most of the people in Elim have been hurt by this because we don't have good jobs to go to if there are no fish. The income we get from small-scale commercial salmon fishing also really helps our people and contributes to our family incomes.

Chum and other salmon are very important to Elim people. We freeze them and hang them to dry, and some people salt them. When the runs are good, we are also able to put enough away to barter with people from other villages for foods we don't have. I do this for muktuk and other foods with my friends on St. Lawrence Island—but can only do this if I have been able to put enough away for my family. The dry fish we put away doesn't spoil. It can last through the winter until the next salmon runs begin.

Elim would like the council to establish a conservative chum quota for the pollock fishery that will protect chum, Chinook and other salmon so that they will return to our rivers. The Native Village of Elim recommends a cap of 30,000 and we would like this alternative to be analyzed. We don't want the pollock industry wasting our fish and we don't want charity. We want them to leave our salmon in the ocean so that they return to our rivers so that we can catch them and put them away with our families-with our children and grandchildren-like we always

Robert Keith, president, Native Village of Elim, and board chairman, Kawerak, Inc. Keith expressed concern about low returns of chum and other fish to rivers in the Elim area. To people with a long history of feast and famine, it's contrary to throw away food as the pollock fishery does, he said. Noting that Elim hunters harvest beluga whales and seals, he worries that low fish populations will affect the food chain.

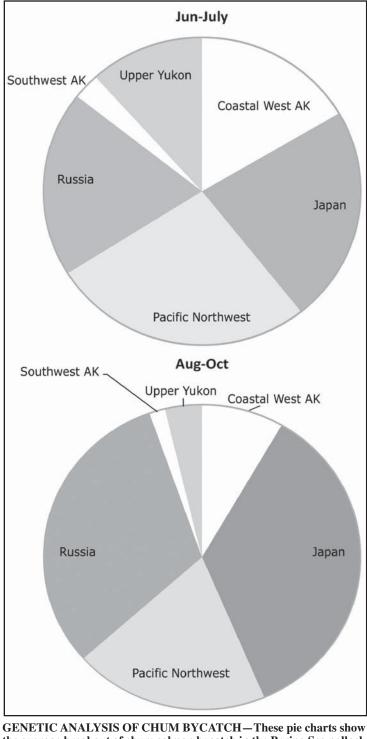

Council member Hull asked Keith how to fill gaps in the council's understanding of salmon returns and the health of salmon resources in the region. Keith said he would need to ask for $2 million to answer that question. He said ADF&G initiated a salmon counting tower project in Elim area river that currently is managed by Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. "I would like to see more data," Keith added. "Gathering data is important, but from what I've seen here, the analytical part of data is very important."

Joe Garnie, mayor, City of Teller. (Wes Okbaok, Teller Traditional Council, sat next to Garnie as he testified and said he supports and agrees with his testimony.) I'm Joe Garnie, 58-year resident of Teller and Port Clarence. I've fished all my life, dry fish, for all species of salmon and small fish. Fishing is my way of life. Last year only 44 king salmon in the Port Clarence district returned to their spawning grounds. They're extinct. Red salmon are very diminished. Last year I caught five reds and my neighbors the same. One person caught eight. Chums are our strongest run. To express how important they are to our community—extinct kings, diminished reds.

I fished at fish camp all my life, my parents and generations before

GENETIC ANALYSIS OF CHUM BYCATCH—These pie charts show the average breakout of chum salmon bycatch in the Bering Sea pollock fishery based on genetic analysis by early (June-July) and late (August-October) B season strata, 2005-2009. The genetic analysis indicates a higher proportion of the bycatch in June-July (about 24%) was from western Alaska (coastal western Alaska and Upper Yukon combined) than in August-October (about 15%) in 2005-2009. # Mosquito bites: How to avoid and treat

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

The mosquito, one of the world's smallest insects, is one of the world's deadliest killers. Worldwide millions of people die every year from diseases carried by the mosquito like malaria, dengue fever, yellow fever, and encephalitis.

Fortunately, mosquito-borne diseases are rare in Alaska. Cases of world, but in rural Alaska, the mosquito bite is more a source of annoyance than a source of serious medical problems.

The itch associated with a mosquito bite is actually an allergic reaction to proteins, literally digestive enzymes, injected at the time of a bite. The reaction tends to be localized and rarely lasts more than a few hours. In very rare cases, the mos-malaria and encephalitis appear sporadically in people who have returned to Alaska after being bitten by mosquitoes in high-risk parts of the quito bite can lead to a severe anaphylactic reaction resulting in a medical emergency causing difficulty breathing. People in this situation should seek immediate medical intervention

Interestingly, allergic reactions to mosquito bites tend to lessen in strength over a lifetime. Adults exposed to many bites generally react with less severity than children or infants who have had only a limited number of bites. In this way, each mosquito bite is like a small allergy shot that desensitizes the body to fu-

Mosquitoes are not too choosy. However, experts say mosquitoes are more attracted to males, people with type-O blood, and obese individuals. Conversely, there is some evidence that people who take a B-vitamin called thiamine are less attractive to mosquitoes. So if you find yourself in the outdoors in a crowd where the mosquito has a choice, consider standing next to thin females with type A or B blood who have been taking vitamins. (Of course this is not official medical advice.)

Mosquitoes are also attracted to exhaled carbon dioxide, certain perfumes and body heat.

Mosquito repellents come in three forms: topical repellants, fabric repellents and physical barriers.

Topical repellents work by interfering with the ability of a mosquito to recognize open skin. DEET in concentrations up to 35 percent may be used on anyone over two months old. In general, use the lowest concentration needed for the duration of possible exposure. DEET 10 percent will last about two hours. DEET should not be applied to the hands of children who may transfer the chemical to sensitive tissue in the eyes or mouth. Caution should be used during application because DEET may degrade certain plastics and fabrics.

A newer chemical called Picaridin, or KBR 3023, is nearly odorless and better tolerated by people who react poorly to DEET, though it is just as effective as DEET at similar doses.

Oil of Lemon Eucalyptus is comparable to DEET at low concentrations but should not be used on children under three years old because is has a strong sedating effect and has been associated with many adverse effects in young children.

Products containing Permethrin are available for treating physical barriers like clothing, shoes, tents, and bed nets. Permethrin should not be applied directly to the skin.

If prevention fails, bites may be treated with hydrocortisone cream or calamine lotion to ease the itch. Experts from the Mayo Clinic describe a homemade topical paste that can be made by mixing equal parts water and powdered meat tenderizer. Another old dermatology trick is to apply very warm water (hot enough to feel uncomfortable but not hot enough to burn the skin) to the bite for a few seconds. Some people find the opposite approach works better and recommend applying ice to the affected area to reduce inflammation.

Stronger reactions can be treated with an antihistamine like diphenhydramine (Benadryl), chlorpheniramine maleate (Chlor-Trimeton, Actifed), loratadine (Claritin) or cetirizine (Zyrtec).

It is not a bad idea to stock the cabin or camp first aid kit with one or more of these treatments. Preventing, or when necessary, properly treating the common mosquito bite will make summer more enjoyable for everyone.

them. Salmon have sustained a lifestyle for us for thousands of years. Before my eyes in my generation I have seen salmon disappear. We are at the last thread of it. It's alarming to see them go extinct. Now what are we going to do? The best we can. I wouldn't wish this on any community to have this poor return. The only village I know of as bad off as us is Nome. Or maybe Brevig Mission. I am asking for a 30,000 chum bycatch hard cap. Some of your past chum bycatch statistics have been below 30,000 fish. Protect a lifestyle that is disappearing, a way of life.

I looked at many statistics, pie charts. A lot of Asian fish are in the bycatch, I guess also Russian fish. Members of my family live there. Be sure not to regard that as having no value. I don't want them to disregard my fish across there. "Thanks, Joe," said council member Cotten. "Joe is a modest person. He's a famous Iditarod musher and a good spokesman for the people he speaks for.'

Roy Ashenfelter, chairman, Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game Northern Norton Sound Advisory Committee (NNSAC). Ashenfelter showed council members a twominute segment from a video of members of his extended family cutting and preparing to dry a fresh catch of chum salmon at a camp on the Fish River near White Mountain. They filled the sound track with laughter as they worked.

Ashenfelter focused his comments on the interception of chum salmon bound for Western Alaska by the Area M (False Pass) sockeye fishery.

The Area M fishery is managed by ADF&G, but the council considers cumulative effects of chum salmon bycatch on communities, not just the effects of chum bycatch in the Bering Sea pollock fishery. Ashenfelter told the council that NNSAC worked hard for 15 years to obtain a chum bycatch cap of 375,000 fish on the Area M fishery from the Alaska Board of Fisheries, but the cap was lifted following a regime change in Juneau. He asked for help in getting Area M fishermen to share in the effort to restore chum runs in Nome area rivers.

In a phone interview with the Nugget following the meeting, Ashenfelter said his testimony was directed to council member Campbell as ADF&G Commissioner. Without the bycatch cap, Area M fishers take about one million chum a year as bycatch, he added.

In discussion among council members following public comments, Fields said it should not be assumed that Area M is an in-region "The council has the purview and responsibility to step into Area M," he added. "I don't believe what we do really addresses the problem of chum in western Alaska. We need to encourage a multifaceted approach to restoring chum in western Alaska....

"I already asked for an expanded discussion of cumulative impacts [in the analysis]," replied council member Ed Dersham of Anchorage. "My concerns are how far to go to balance community impacts.... It's a snowball, so I hope the staff can stop it, or it will take out houses at the bottom of the hill.

Arctic Imperative participants visit Nome on whirlwind tour

By Diana Haecker

A spin-off from a conference that happened in Girdwood last week brought 14 visitors on a whirlwind tour to Nome on Friday. The online newspaper Alaska Dispatch had organized the two-day conference called "Arctic Imperative: Think of the Bering Strait as the next Panama Canal." They gathered international policymakers, industry and investors for discussions on what the opening of the Arctic marine routes could mean in terms of "opportunities for investment in infrastructure and commerce."

Nome Mayor Denise Michels was a featured speaker as was Vera Metcalf, director of the Eskimo Walrus Commission.

After the conference at the Aleyaska Resort, 14 of the participants opted to actually take a 48hour tour to the Arctic from Girdwood to Barrow, Wainright, Kotzebue, Savoonga and Nome. Among them were a chief correspondent for the Japanese media group Nikkei Inc.; the chief investment officer of Guggenheim Partners, a $100 billion global investment firm; Nome's own Megan Alvanna-Stimpfle; and Evelyn Sidon of Wainright.

In a reception at the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum, Museum Director Laura Samuelson gave the visitors a narrated tour through Nome's history. Denise Michels, just coming off a plane from Gambell, spoke briefly on the importance of a deep water port as the Arctic opens for summer marine traffic. Michels said that she gave a power point presentation on a shortterm solution to Arctic shipping and that involves a deep-water port in Nome. Michels said that the writing of increased shipping traffic is on the wall and that a plan is needed to prepare. "We need to act now," Michels said. And this may include a scenario where the private sector gets more involved in paying for infrastructure development. "For the last six years, we have asked the feds and the state for funds to build a bigger port, but they keep telling us 'We don't have the money," said Michels.

Alaska Dispatch publisher Alice Rogoff said that she had become aware of the importance of the Arctic a few years ago and put on two conferences at the "Alaska House", a now closed New York City art gallery. Rogoff said she realized that she had to bring policymakers and investors to Alaska to get some understanding that the USA is indeed an Arctic nation. "The Arctic is referred to as the 'last frontier' or 'the last emerging market' and we would like to develop real interest in the financial community to help build infrastructure in the Arctic," Rogoff explained. Asked why the conference was not held in the Arctic, Rogoff said, "For most people from the outside, Anchorage is already on the dark side of the moon." She said that the conference attendees have a busy schedule and that it was more time efficient to hold the conference near Anchorage in Girdwood than to fly

Asked about the unusual occurrence that a news media outlet- supposed to be neutral observers — is the main sponsor of a conference with policy makers, private sector and state officials, Rogoff said that she as the publisher and owner of Alaska Dispatch did not think it was inappropriate. "The editor of Alaska Dispatch did struggle with it, but we kept the journalists out of the organization and planning [of the event] and they were sent to cover the conference just like any other event," Rogoff said.

She added that as a newsperson, she sees many different stories that make up the big picture and she felt that something needed to be done about bringing awareness of Arctic issues to the Lower 48. She pointed out that it is of importance to get the locals at the table to have a say in development in the Arctic and the ocean and to prepare for the implications of global warming in the north. "If we get a farmer in Iowa to say 'We are an Arctic nation,' then we've gotten somewhere," said Rogoff.

"In conclusion, Alaskans are waking up to the importance of the issue and the importance to convince the rest of the country that it is worthwhile to support the development of infrastructure in coastal Alaska," Ro-

After a short visit in the museum, the group was whisked on a tour of Nome and then caught the evening jet back to Anchorage.

WHITE BUFFALO — A white buffalo calf born May 12 in Hunt County, Texas has attracted national attention

Sacred White Buffalo to receive ceremony – All nations invited

Greenville, TX – To the Lakota, there is nothing more sacred than the birth of a white buffalo calf. So when a white buffalo calf was born in Hunt County, it attracted national attention.

The birth of the male calf on May 12, amidst a powerful thunderstorm on the ranch of Arby Little Soldier who is of Mandan, Hidatsa, Arikara and Lakota heritage, was nothing short of a miracle.

White buffalo are extremely rare; and according to the National Bison Association they occur in approximately one out of every 10 million births.

Arby Little Soldier and his wife Patricia were out riding horseback when they spotted a newborn buffalo calf, "His brother was born a couple of days before him and we went to see him. We started riding back and saw a cow that was fixin' to have a calf, so my wife said, 'Let's stay and watch.' But the herd started surrounding us so we left."

The next day when he got home he said he saw something near his pond running alongside one of the cows that he thought was a coyote or a white dog. He took out his binoculars and could see the small calf running along the backside of his mother but was cut off from getting a direct look at it.

"Finally she stopped and he walked ahead of her and he peeked his head around the front of her chest. He looked back and looked up towards me and I could see his face. It was a white face with black eyes and a black nose and he had a black tipped tail," he said, all traits of a truly sacred white buffalo.

"It was pretty amazing," he said. "He was born to all nations and not just to me."

The couple, who met in high school in Bismarck, N.D. and reunited after many years at a rodeo in Texas, both come from a long line of buffalo ranchers. Patricia's family raised buffalo on a ranch north of Bismarck called the Blackburn Ranch, and Arby also managed a large herd in North Dakota before moving to Texas.

Together they manage a herd of about 50 head of buffalo on their ranch located about an hour northeast of Dallas. The couple operated a small concession business selling buffalo products and attended some of the largest events around the country, including Gathering of Nations in Albuquerque, N.M. and the opening of the National Museum of the American Indian in Washington, D.C. After traveling across the United States and crossing eight different time zones in one year, they decided to call it quits.

Now the couple will have a full time job with the onslaught of publicity generated over the birth of Wakinyah Pejuta Mahpiya, Lightning Medicine Cloud, the name Little Soldier would like to bestow on the sacred calf, but he must wait until tribal leaders from around the country gather at his ranch to determine what prophecy the animal brings.

The official naming ceremony began Wednesday, June 29, at 9 a.m. This will be the official blessing and dedication ceremony performed by the elders and medicine men from North Dakota and South Dakota tribes. All nations, all drum groups, and dancers have been invited to at-

SPOTTED! — This male bluethroat was attracting a mate on the Kougarok Road on June 5.

Bluethroats observed along Kougarok Road

By Laurie McNicholas

"Mile 22.5-23, Bluethroats displaying all along this area," noted Kim Risen of NatureScape Tours on the bird sightings sheet in the Aurora Inn lobby on June 4. Early the next morning staff from The Nome Nugget drove to the Kougarok Road area specified in Risen's tip and spotted a bluethroat male. They watched the bird for a couple of hours with binoculars, scope and camera lens as it sang in courtship from branches above willow thickets and executed its elaborate display flight.

Photographer Nadja Roessek tried to hide in bushes near a perch to which the bluethroat repeatedly returned, but he spotted her and slowly descended to a point near her, calling all the way. The small, elusive bird disappeared after a quick look at Nadja and before she could snap a photo.

"That was really something," Roessek said of the experience. "He sounded like a helicopter coming down, tchak, tchak, tchak, tchak. I thought he was going to land on my head."

The bluethroat is an Old World thrush related to the nightingale. Its loud, varied and melodious song includes a metallic ting, ting, ting. In breeding plumage the male has a brilliant blue throat with a chestnut patch in the center, a buffy or white eye stripe, white underparts and a brown back. Females have a pale throat and a dark breastband. The base of the tail in both sexes is a bright rufous color conspicuous in flight. They eat mostly insects.

Bluethroats are secretive, often remaining near the ground and under cover.

They build nests among thickets in a small hollow on the ground near water. The nests contain four to seven green eggs with flecks of brown. The female incubates the eggs for about 14 days. Both male and female tend the young for 14 days until they are able to fly.

Bluethroats nest in northern Alaska, Siberia and northern Europe. They winter in north Africa, the Near East and in south and southeast Asia.

Lucie M. Trigg

Lucie Maria Ah-Ki-Ruaq (Okpealuk) Trigg was born September 5, 1930 to Robert and Mamie Okpealuk on Little Diomede. Her mom said it was a warm, sunny day. She was the second oldest sibling of William, Lawrence, Mary, Cecelia, Baby Thomas, Katherine, Roberta, Thomas and Anthony.

In 1938, Robert and Mamie moved their family to Nome. It was then she captured her love for books. She attended school at Nome Public Schools and later graduated from Mount Edgecumbe High School. Even at a young age she knew she wanted to help people, so she left Nome to attend nursing school in Pennsylvania where she achieved her registered nursing degree, becoming one of the first Eskimo nurses of the time. During her time there, she was able to attend a live Elvis concert!

Lucie married Darryl Trigg on October 2, 1958. They began their life together here in Nome before moving to the States. They brought Jon and Billy with them to live in The Bronx, New York where she worked at The Bronx -Lebanon Hospital Center in 1965. She said one afternoon while waiting for the bus, an elderly Hispanic woman came up to her and started talking in Spanish. After waiting for her to stop, she had to explain that she didn't understand her, the lady started scolding herthinking she was Hispanic. It took her a minute or two to explain that she was an Eskimo from Alaska. She recalled it as scary at the moment but funny to tell years later.

Then they moved to Rapid City, South Dakota when Maria joined the family. She enjoyed living there because her sister, Mary, lived there. They returned to Alaska, first living in Anchorage where she worked as a pediatric nurse at the old Alaska Native Medical Center. Then returning "Home" to Nome in 1971 working at the Maynard McDougal Hospital in the inpatient ward. Later she became a mental health clinician at Behavioral Health Services until she retired from the Norton Sound Health Corporation in 2000. Both she and Darryl enjoyed family outings, picnics and fishing-fishingfishing.

In turn, they were given 11 grandchildren: (Jon's) Yannita, Sherry, Nellie, Micah, Jared, Teresa, (Bill's) Paul, Kaylee, (Mia's) Shawn, Ethan,

Saying it Sincerely

By Rev. Julie Yoder Elmore Pastor at Community United Methodist Church A member of the Nome Ministerial Association Scripture: Romans 6:12-23

To  $\sin$  or not  $\sin$  – that is the dilemma. Choose the path of  $\sin$  or choose the path of obedience to God? What will have dominion over our bodies, minds, and spirits:  $\sin$  that leads to death or God who leads to eternal life?

What does it mean to follow God's path? One approach is seeking to love God and to love neighbor. If we love our neighbor, we love God. Sometimes it is easy to love our neighbor and other times loving our neighbor is very difficult. Sometimes our neighbor lives a lifestyle different from our own and his or her choices seem to lead down a path of continual destruction. Sometimes our neighbor thinks that he or she is better than everyone else and treats everyone with disrespect. Loving our neighbors with grace really tests our faith.

Early Methodists were constantly testing their faith, living by three simple rules – 1. Do no harm; 2. Do good; 3. Stay in love with God. Doing no harm forces us to ask the question, "Is what I am about to say or do going to hurt or help this neighbor?" If the answer is hurt, perhaps we should consider taking another approach so that what we are about to say or do is helpful to that neighbor.

When doing good, think about whom you interact with on a daily basis. When you go to the Post Office or store or anywhere in your community, are you making sure to acknowledge or say hello to everyone you see? Doing good means taking the initiative to make everyone feel like they are worth something by acknowledging them. Retired United Methodist Bishop, Kenneth L. Carder, says that doing good "includes positively contributing to the well-being of others." We never know when someone is going through a difficult time and our act of kindness could make all the difference for that neighbor that day.

Staying in love with God means taking time for prayer, Bible study, worship, and other activities where we seek to deepen our understanding of and relationship with God. As we seek to know God in a deeper way, we allow God to shape us into the person God created us to be. Rules 1 and 2 could perhaps come more naturally to us as we deepen our relationship with God.

We are human and will not follow these three simple rules perfectly all the time. Just because we will not be able to do them perfectly does not mean that we should not try. The good news is that God is always there to offer us forgiveness and grace. We just have to humble ourselves, ask for forgiveness, and try again next time. God continues to perfect us in love – we are all a work in progress. God's love and grace abounds and is available to all!

The family of Max Leo Iyapana, Sr., expresses their heartfelt thanks to all the friends and family who comforted us during our time of loss. We appreciated the visits, flowers, cards, singing and prayers. We give a big thank you to Nome Eskimo Community, Wally Merrill, John Handeland, Patty (Bunny) Milligrock, Sue Steinacher, Edward Soolook, Otoo Soolook, Ann Soolook, Mike Minix, Dan Karmun, Emma, Elise Nash, and Tillie Teayoumeak Nasuayaaq, Nathan, Heather, and Helen for coming down from Point Hope, Alaska. We apologize if we forgot to thank anyone else. In loving memory of Max.

We just want to let you know what a terrific time we had on our Solstice visit to quote Jana, "Everything was Fabulous!" Many thanks for the friendship and hospitality from everyone. Sincerely, (Some of) Jana's friends from Anchorage: Julie Garrigues, Sue Johnson, Theda Pittman and Pat Abney.

P.S. Jana asked whether we would be willing on our way out of town to assist in the search for extraterrestrial frogs. We were thrilled to see one and will soon send a picture of the cheerful little alien to Jana.

Thank you. Our sincere gratitude goes to Darryl Okitkun. Special thanks to the cross makers and box builders: Emmanuel Keyes, Emil Mike, Robert Hunt, Sonny Akaran and Alex Leichty. Grave diggers: Stan Afcan, Anthony "Pabeo" Tonuchuk, Victor Tonuchuk Jr., Randall Cheemuk, Douglas "Dougie" Cheemuk, Axel Cheemuk, and Boy Cheemuk. Many people who prayed for Pa and his family. Thank you all who cooked and brought food, gave their condolences and those who traveled near and far. You have all touched our hearts for the love and are you all have given. Quyana, quyana, quyana. The Prince/Cheemuk families apologize for anyone we forgot to recognize for our support in the time of our grief. Put to rest on his uncle, John "Duny" Cheemuk, Jr.'s birthday.

To the community of Saint Michael, Health Aides, and VPSO Joe Katchtag. From Tommy & Elsie Cheemuk and family, Prince family in Kotlik, Steves family, Tonuchuk family, Westlock family, and the Akaran family. We would like to give all the thanks our lord Jesus Christ can provide in thanking you all for the help in searching for our son, brother cousin, uncle, nephew, friend. Johnny Cheemuk Prince "Papa2". We cannot expertise our deepest thanks but keep you all in our prayers only thanks we can give back. Thanks again many blessings to you all & god bless, be safe during the summer season and always.

Parnell leaves Nome projects in budget

By Sandra L. Medearis

When Gov. Sean Parnell whacked the wish list for state capital project spending by $412 million, Nome area projects survived, all except $75,000 Nome Volunteer Fire Dept. intended to use for equipment.

Otherwise, there was glee among those who value and revere relics of Nome's history: $14 million for Nome's museum project, the Richard Foster Building, stayed in the $2.8 billion that survived the cuts. The board of Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum is currently searching for suitable sites on Front Street.

School board tables contract extension for athletic director

By Diana Haecker

In a special session held last Tuesday, the Nome school board failed to muster the votes to extend athletic director Pat Callahan's contract for one more year. The vote to the motion to extend Callahan's contract was a tie and thereby failed. Four board members were present with Barb Amarok, Marie Tozier, Betsy Brennan and Barb Nickels in attendance. Board president Gloria Karmun was absent due to sickness. Nome Public School District's new superintendent Mike Brawner was also present. He officially took over the reigns from former superintendent Jon Wehde on July 1. Brawner said that based on a positive evaluation of athletic director Pat Callahan, Jon Wehde had recommended that Callahan's contract be extended for another year.

The position pays an annual salary of $8,000. Board member Barb Nickels said that the position historically didn't have to get approved on a board level since it pays a salary of APPLICATIONS — Nome's coastal management coordinator Jim Dory looks through a stack of annual placer mine applications that were up for consistency review under the Alaska coastal management program. The legislature didn't extend the ACMP program and with that took the city's and any coastal district's ability away to review projects that require a state or federal permit.

Coastal Management dies in House

Uncertainty follows

By Diana Haecker

Nome's coastal district coordinator Jim Dory last week flipped through a stack of multi agency applications that came to his office at City Hall for consistency review. Most of them have been already given his OK, but some are still pending. "I don't know what to do with them now," Dory said, adding that they are probably going to be filed away and that's that. While it was only a small part of his job working at city hall, Dory was until last Thursday the city's coastal coordinator and the city's eyes and ears to review if coastal projects, placer or suction dredge miners were consistent with the city's coastal management plan. Dory said that this year saw a big surge in applications, 60 or so, when in previous years there have been only about a dozen coming across his desk. Most permits that Dory deals with are annual placer mining applications that were handed in by placer miners and suction dredge miners to the Alaska Department of Natural Resources, which through its ACMP division distributed the applications to the right agencies or coastal districts for consistency review. Dory said that the voluntary program that allowed states to develop the coastal management zoning was a useful tool for the Nome coastal district. While most applications were not of concern, an application by Noel Tanner to mine at Dry Creek a few years back did enable the city to restrict hours of operation and added dust control to the mining project. It gave the city and the community a voice in what is allowed to happen in the coastal area.

This now has come to an end.

Eighteen House Representatives voted down an amended bill that would've extended the opt-in program that allowed the state and coastal districts a voice in project applications. On Monday, the Senate passed the bill. Nome representative Neal Foster and District T Senator Donnie Olson voted to keep it alive. Various different versions of the Life is great. I am proud to be who I am. I am an individual person. I create values for myself and others.

We all should wake up each morning saying this to ourselves. Too many negative things are projected making us think that life is not great. We must train ourselves to never mind these negatives, because these negatives will always be there. Keeping honest in every way we can will help us lift ourselves into higher consciousness. Consciousness is being aware.

When we do negative things we are not happy with ourselves and we tend to look for the cause of the negatives that come our way. We often blame things or people for the negatives when the fact is that we caused these negatives to happen to us. Another bothersome mentality is saying that one knows what is being taught or learned. In fact we never get it. Life is always changing for the better. You say you know, right? Try doing what you say you know. If you cannot do it, then you don't know it. An example is signing up for a job, you are saying, "Pick me, I know how to do this.'

I am of Inupiaq heritage. Our ancestors were proud of who they were. The journals of the first explorers who came here tell me this. The captains were amazed at the

Bamboozled

We've been had. We've been led to believe the special legislative session would keep the Coastal Zone Management Program alive. Instead, the House of Representatives acted like a bunch of guys standing around a drowning man and refusing to pull him out of the water for fear that they might have to do CPR. The House claims they pulled the plug on CZMP because the governor was going to veto it anyway. Well, why not let the governor do his own dirty work?

This makes us look like the dumbest state in the nation. We've heard all sorts of lame excuses. What it seems to boil down to is that most legislators did not do their homework. We would rather shoot ourselves in the foot. Here we are, the state with the most extensive coastline and no management plan. In Nome we are stuck with a bunch of beach mining permits left hanging because there is no longer a coordinated filing process. We have to listen to legislative flim-flam that the CZMP employees all took other jobs when they heard their program would cease to exist. No effort was made to invite them to return. No effort was made to re-staff. Do we hear the "jobs" mantra going selectively mute? Do we see selfish ignorance being used to promote a hidden agenda that would have us cut off our nose to spite our face?

We deserve better leadership. Although our own representatives in the Senate and House voted to keep CZMP alive, others looked after their own benighted interests. The governor and the House gave western Alaska the shaft. Our governor should be recalled for his narrowminded perspective. It is no wonder he has earned the name, "Captain Zero." — N.L.M.

Foster's Report

By Rep. Neal Foster House District 39

The House and Senate met briefly at the end of June to try and save the Alaska Coastal Zone Management Program (ACMP). The extension of this program has been contentious issue and in part led to the prolonged special session we had earlier this year. The main sticking point has been on two issues.

1. The meaningful inclusion of local knowledge in the assessment of a projects impact. Those of us who would like to see the program strengthened prefer language that gives local knowledge due consideration and not an automatic backseat to scientific evidence. Those who prefer the program as is want scientific evidence to always trump local knowledge. The problem with that is how low the bar is set for something to meet the definition of "scientific knowledge." As written, one biologist's notes from a few months spent in the field would outweigh generations of accumulated knowledge about migration patterns, seasonal weather conditions, etc.

2. Removal of board members for cause. Most board

Polar bear listing as threatened upheld

A federal judge in the Washington D.C. court of appeals last week upheld the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's listing of the polar bear as a threatened species, but denied to elevate the listing as the more protected "endangered" status. The judge rejected the State of Alaska's and various industry groups' arguments that global warming is too uncertain a threat for the bear to be protected at all.

The decision addresses the listing status of the polar bear, not the separate question of whether Interior Department's special rule exempting greenhouse gases from regulation under the ESA was lawful. The Center for Biological Diversity led the charge to petition for the endangered listing of polar bear. Rebecca Noblin with the Center said that even with the threatened listing, the cause for the polar bear's demise is not adequately addressed. "Nearly every day we sea a new study about ever-worsening sea ice loss, and polar bear scientists are finding that more and more polar bears are struggling," Noblin said.

The State of Alaska has joined in to fight the polar bear listing as an endangered species. "While the State is disappointed the polar bear remains listed as threatened under the Endangered Species Act, the State believes the court was correct in rejecting the environmental groups' claim that the polar bear should be listed as endangered," said Attorney General John Burns. "However, given the current health of the species the State continues to believe that it is inappropriate to list this species at this time.

Governor touts Alaska oil

In front of the national press corps in Washington D.C., Governor Sean Parnell and Natural Resources commissioner Dan Sullivan laid out the state's plan to offer additional lands and offshore waters for oil and gas exploration. Addressing outside media reporters is part of Parnell's strategy to sell the state's goal of pumping 1 million barrels of oil through the trans Alaska Pipeline to the rest of the country. Parnell argued that Alaska's oil would contribute to US energy security and would create new jobs. Undeveloped areas in the central North Slope area will be available for lease. According to the state, the area still holds 3 to 6 billion barrels of oil and 24 to 45 trillion cubic feet of natural gas. The press conference was hosted by the Institute for 21st Century Energy at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

EPA issues draft air quality permit for Shell

The Environmental Protection Agency has released an air quality permit for Shell's exploratory oil drilling operations in the Chukchi Sea. The permit is up for public comment. Shell's proposed exploration drilling operations would emit more than 250 tons of air pollutants per year. EPA previously issued the two permits to Shell in March and April of 2010. These permits were then appealed by local and environmental groups to EPA's independent Environmental Appeals Board. The permits were overturned in December 2010. EPA made changes to the permits based on the groups' complaints. The revised permits have reduced emissions of most key air pollutants by more than 50 percent from the levels allowed in the 2010 permits. The draft permits are subject to a 30-day public comment period as well as a public hearing before the EPA issues final permits. The comments period officially begins on July 6 and are taken until August 5.

Court voids Alaska Statute to protect First Amendment rights

In a lawsuit brought by Alaska booksellers, libraries, a photographer and other First Amendment and media organizations, Chief U.S. District Judge Ralph Beistline held that a Senate bill would have chilled free speech. The bill would have made anyone who operates a website criminally liable for posting material deemed "harmful to minors." "There are no reasonable technological means that enable a speaker on the Internet to ascertain the actual age of persons who access their communications," the Court held. "Individuals who fear the possibility of a minor receiving speech intended for an adult may refrain from exercising their right to free speech at all - an unacceptable result."

The Court held that if Alaska believes additional protections are necessary, the Legislature can enact a narrowly drawn statute. "Other jurisdictions have written statutes that survive constitutional muster, and the Alaska Legislature can follow suit if it so desires," Judge Beistline wrote. Before the Alaska Legislature had enacted the current statute, Media Coalition and the ACLU had pointed out the constitutional defects in the bill, and sought to work with the Legislature and the Attorney General's office to draft a bill, which would provide further protections for minors without violating the First Amendment.

• Governor Parnell leaves Nome projects in budget

On the cuts list released by Parnell on June 29, his red pen also spared the $7 million for a long-term care facility replacement slated for construction next door to the new hospital. The budget funds other projects in Nome: Anvil Mountain Correctional Center projects, $715,000; Nome club, Boys & Girls Clubs Alaska, technology upgrades, $8,000; Nome Public School sprinkler/fire alarm upgrades, $90,000; Nome Elementary School boiler replacement, $545,838; Nome-Council Road maintenance Milepost 4 to 16, $4.5 million; and Nome Armory deferred maintenance, $950,000. Additionally, Nome Alaska Army National Guard hangar will be catching some rays with $200,000 locked in for solar panel installation. A University of Alaska project to assess geothermal potential at Pilgrim Hot Springs received $1.33 million.

Among projects in surrounding villages:

• Elim Armory deferred maintenance project received $5,000.

• Gambell evacuation road repairs and extension received $11 million, but $248,000 for heavy equipment got the ax.

• Heavy equipment did not fare well also in Golovin; $350,300 was cut, but $11.85 million stayed in the budget for Golovin's airport runway and apron repairs.

• Native Village of Unalakleet had an assisted-living facility funded at $300,000. Unalakleet also received $100,000 for erosion control, but lost $3.4 million for a new public safety building.

• Wales Clinic renovation and repair project received $200,000.

Western Access Project that would build a transportation corridor from the Fairbanks area to Nome, running through or near many villages and opening up commerce, mining and tourism received $1.5 million for planning. A spur from such a road or railroad connecting Ambler mining district to the grid also received $1.25 million for environmental permitting and early public processes.

All in all, the area formerly designated as District 39 received $67,131,783 for capital projects and had 8 percent, or $5,314,200, cut from the capital budget. But now, after the Alaska Redistricting Board has redrawn House district boundaries, District 39 covers the greatest number of square miles of any district. Stretching from the Bering Sea to the Canadian border, the new District 39 adds communities and their capital project funding, unless an entity sues and succeeds in getting boundaries changed.

The eastern and southern parts of District 39 have received funding for the usual roads, clinics, solid waste disposal and school upgrades. Added to these, funding will be going to the neighbors in interior parts of the district for energy projects:

• Chitina Electric, Inc, Five Mile Creek hydroelectric project, $277,000

• Interior Regional Housing Authority, wood heating feasibility assessments, $154,477.

• Lime village Traditional Council, photovoltaic (solar energy) system retrofit, $25,000.

• Tetlin biomass energy project, $200,000.

Funded progressive alternative projects, many under Alaska Village Electric Corp., provider of power in 53 Western Alaska villages: $90,000 for Kaltag solar construction, for example.

Big orders for Bush reps

The character of these energy projects underscores the difference in energy sources availability in a district that spans the state from east to west. The coastal parts of District 39 have no potential for hydroelectric energy and wood burning except for limited amounts of driftwood collected on beaches.

The new configurations of districts 39 and 40 (including Kotzebue) that cause these representational areas to comprise a fat northern third of the state mean that fighting for energy projects and expenditures to relieve the high cost of energy in Western Alaska falls on the shoulders of three members of Legislature: Sen. Donny Olson and House representatives Neal Foster and Reggie Joule.

The capital budget funds very large projects in southwest and southeast Alaska, according to Parnell's budget message. For example, compare Susitna hydro project, $65.7 million; Whitman Lake, Ketchikan, $8 million; Blue Lake, Sitka, 28.5 million; and a hydroelectric project in southwest Alaska at $10 million. The PCE energy fund, with a $34.3 annual cost is intended to balance out state spending for rural Alaska. The budget puts $400 million in that piggybank.

Alternative energy in

Parnell said he left $1 billion worth of energy projects in the budget. Except for replenishing the Power Cost Equalization program that modestly decreases light bills for high-energy cost areas, the energy projects funded promise relief down the road, rather than assistance for the coming winter of increased fuel prices in Western Alaska.

The budget provides Alaska Village Electric Corp. $842,000 for wind energy study projects in St. Mary's, Elim, Koyuk, Scammon Bay, and Stebbins. Additionally, the budget holds $85,000 for AVEC's hybrid wind-diesel system turbine upgrade in Selawik, and on Kodiak Island, $237,000 for AVEC's Old Harbor hydroelectric project.

On the other hand, Parnell cut money from the Alaska Housing Finance Corp.'s budget for home energy rebate and weatherization program. Parnell whacked the rebates money by $12.5 million, leaving $37.5 million, and cut weatherization by 12.5 million, leaving $64 million in that kitty. Nome residents have used this source to upgrade their homes. Parnell vetoed $10 mil-

under $10,000. "But there was a big debate about the negotiated agreement two years ago and that's when it became board policy to approve the athletic director's contract as well," Nickels explained.

Lacking the contract paperwork as part of the special session's board packet, board member Marie Tozier asked for a job description and the separate contract before she could vote on whether or not to extend it.

A somewhat heated debate ensued as Tozier made an amendment to the main motion to table the vote on the contract until she has more information on the contract. Betsy Brennan said that the board signed off on contracts with teachers, the technical di-

"This is the second year in a row that this person [the athletic director] for no reason at all, gets a bad message," Nickels said. Nome-Beltz High School principal Steve Gast commented that Callahan is in the middle of planning for the cross-country running season, making travel arrangements and that a disruption of the contract could have a negative effect on the school's athletic programs as well as sending a bad message to Callahan. The contract expired on June 30.

Tozier said that her intention is not to send any message, but to have a better understanding of what the negotiated agreement and the contract entail and how it came about that the athletic director's contract – of contracts dealing with less than $10,000 in salary — is singled out for board approval. The motion to extend the contract failed in a vote 2 to 2, with Brennan and Nickels voting for it, and Amarok and Tozier voting against it.

In other business, the board voted unanimously to extend the pupil transportation contract with Morgan Enterprises for five years beginning FY 2012 through 2016. The rate for the three-bus fleet per day is $605.76, up $63.23 from last fiscal year. The rate increase takes into account the purchase of three new busses, one in FY2013 and two in FY 2016. The rates for activity transportation and for fieldtrips stay the same at $70 and $100, respectively.

Bill Gartung announced that school climate survey results are due to be released from the consulting firm in August. The board agreed to go over the survey results with the consulting firm and then present them to the public.

The board also thanked long time NPS employees Sharon Pentilla, Vern Rickett and Jon Wehde for their service. Pentilla taught for 20 years at the Nome Elementary School, Vern Rickett has been a counselor for 21 years at the NBHS and Jon Wehde served the school district in various leadership positions, last as the superintendent, for the past eight years. The school district has ordered special decorative gold pans to be presented to the leaving employees.

• Coastal Zome Management Program death causes uncertainty

attempt to keep the ACMP alive were discussed first during the regular session, then a bill was on a list of 10 bills to tackle during the legislature's first special session, but didn't pass. The state then began the process to wind down the program, place the 33 state employees working for the ACMP somewhere else, and canceling office leases. Alaska's Attorney General John Burns told the House Finance Committee on Tuesday - during the second special session called in on Monday June 27— that the office has been dismantled, that all but five employees have left and that it would take about one year to revamp the program. Most legislators interviewed by the Nugget said they didn't know prior to that point that the ACMP office had been decimated.

With fingers pointing to the administration and the lack of will to keep the ACMP going, the Nugget asked the Governor's office what caused the change of heart from his support of an extension of the program at the regular session to the threat last week to veto the bill, should it have passed. Governor Sean Parnell's spokeswoman Sharon Leighow told the Nugget that he had supported a strong coastal management program and helped to negotiate a compromise that found the support of 40 Representatives as well as local communities and industry in the regular session. At a Resource Development Council speech last week. Parnell told the council that he would veto the bill if the Legislature passed it. Parnell argued that it would be bad for industry. "To extend the existing ACMP program at this point, after it has been wound down, would significantly delay projects, cost Alaskan jobs and impact economic opportunities something I cannot allow," Parnell told the RDC. Although Parnell said that Alaskans still have the opportunity to provide input, it will take extra vigilance to be aware of projects and which agency to submit comments to, as from now on coastal development is to be reviewed by federal agencies and subject to the National Environmental Policy Act and other federal rules and regula-

When asked about handing over a large chunk of local control to the feds— as the state is in a constant fight against what Parnell calls "federal overreach in state affairs" Leighow wrote, "Our frustrations with the federal government have been largely due to inaction; the ACMP allowed us to add more conditions to project activities — it didn't allow us to speed up the process."

While some lawmakers were taken by surprise that the ACMP offices were already dissolved, Leighow wrote that lawmakers knew after the end of the last special session that the state was going to begin the wind-down phase. "These employees had to go find other work. We let it be known that we were doing it," Leighow's email

However, House speaker Mike Chenault, R-Nikiski, said he came to Juneau with the intent to vote for the extension of the program. "I changed my mind after talking with the administration and finding out how long it would take to transition to a working ACMP office again," Chenault said. He added that some of the information on the dismantling of the office had been relayed to legislators. "But we weren't fully aware of it, the issue of re-staffing was not communicated very well," Chenault said. He said he also didn't realize that there were 100 applications coming in per month and that it would cause project delays if adequate staff were not available to handle the workload.

"I feel like we've done everything we could, "Chenault said.

Rep. Alan Dick, representing District 6, which includes Interior villages, Kuskokwim villages and the headwaters of Stony River, expressed utter frustration and said that all the kings in the world would have not been able to put Humpty Dumpty back together. "I arrived in Juneau wanting to vote yes for the bill, but not having a working ACMP office in place, didn't make it practical." Dick said that his priorities are that local people should have a loud voice and that he should listen to his constituents. "But my constituents didn't give me one favorable email to extend the program," Dick told the Nugget. He said that the Alaska Miners Association came to him and asked him to oppose the bill. "The mining community in my district opposed it," he said. "I could've not voted yes and then look them in they

Dick added that many legislators had come down to Juneau to vote yes. "But there was no political will from the administration to re-build the ACMP office. There was no evidence that the ACMP office could have been put together again without causing a big backlog. Nobody did the homework on that one," Dick said. "I felt terrible after the vote."

Other representatives like Tammie Wilson, R-North Pole, had opposed the special session and the attempt to resurrect ACMP. She wrote the Nugget that she supported the idea and processes of ACMP, but voted no because she "discovered that the administration had taken measures to continue assisting coastal districts with permitting processes through other agencies, and, secondly, that revamping the old ACMP, with all the staff having departed, was impractical."

Mia Costello, R- Anchorage defended her 'no' vote saying that renewing the program at the eleventh hour would only have created more problems than it would have solved. "It would have led to a rush to hire and train new program specialists and support staff," she wrote in an email to the Nugget. "The vague language of the new bill would have almost certainly led to lengthy litigation battles over how the new process was supposed to work. All the while, permit applications would have been building up and projects would have been delayed or cancelled, leading to the loss of Alaskan jobs and a slower economy. All of these things led me to the determination that the program needed to be rebuilt from the ground up using a measured, deliberative approach. While the lapse of the program was regrettable, rushing to resuscitate it via stopgap measures would have

Rep. Mike Hawker, R-Anchorage, Eagle River, Whittier, said that the 'no' votes were not necessarily 'no' votes against the program, but that the eleventh hour timing basically killed the bill. He had worked with Reggie Joule, Bob Herron and the bush caucus on the bill in the first session. "I came to Juneau hoping to pass the bill but then the administration told us that the ACMP office in Juneau is completely dismantled and that the program has no budget beyond June 30," Hawker told the Nugget. "I would've liked to see the program continue." He said that now the legislature has to start from scratch to bring back the program.

What now?

Until that time comes, Alaska's coastal districts now have no enforceable policies or a seat at the table in terms of local input to coastal development activities, be it the works of a suction dredge miner at Nome's west beach, or a major industrial exploration drill rig heading out to the Chukchi Sea or a large hard rock mine like the Pebble proj-

On June 13, well before the second special session that was supposed to bring the ACMP back from the dead, Randy Bates, director of the Division of Coastal and Ocean Management within the Department of Natural Resources, sent an email to the coastal districts and other state department heads informing them that the Alaska Coastal Management Program authorities laws are repealed beginning July 1 and that local coastal management plans will be without statutory authority and unenforceable. "Departments and affected divisions, including the Division of Coastal and Ocean Management will need to make policy decisions on how to restructure and amend their regulations and procedures under their existing authorities removing references to the ACMP," Bates wrote in the email.

This means for Nome that decisions have to be made at the City council level.

The good news is that as a the coastal district encompasses the municipality with the power to draw up ordinances, Nome can decide to roll the work that went into the Nome Coastal Management Plan - guided by the planning commission and then adopted by the city council - into an ordinance. But this, city manager Josie Bahnke said, needs to also take into account that the city may have to come up with its own permitting process and the funding for it.

The Nome Coastal Management Plan spelled out three issues of local concern, governing coastal development, maintaining public access to the beach and shorefast ice and having designated subsistence areas.

Nome's zoning consultant Eileen Bechtol said that Nome is lucky because it can draw up ordinances or amend their zoning code to work coastal management into enforceable policy, whereas the rest of the Bering Strait Resource District area, which is under no overarching borough or municipal government has lost the seat at the table. "There is no way to retain the plan, the program is over and it will be years to get it back," Bechtol said. "But the city can take the NCMP and work it into the zoning code." Bechtol said that other boroughs like the Kenai borough are in the process of making their coastal management plan part of the borough's code.

In Nome, the city only received $6,000 in funding to run the ACMP consistency reviews. City Manager Josie Bahnke said it was never an adequately funded program for Nome. Scrolling down a list of project applications that typically came across Dory's desk, Bahnke said most applications are for suction dredges, then the US Coast Guard applied for sonar testing in the Bering Sea; there was an application that dealt with the Airport safety extension of the runway and there has been an NSEDC application to remove crab shell debris. As of last week, there has been no guidance from either state or federal agencies how to streamline the permitting process, something that was achieved under the ACMP. "We don't know what the new process is,"

Senator Mark Begich's office in D.C. also didn't have a ready answer for the federal level. But Begich did express that giving up participation in the program is not beneficial for Alaska. "Alaskans have lost a chance for a local voice in coastal and offshore development decisions as a result of the demise of the Coastal Zone Management program," Begich told the Nugget in an email. We still may get a chance to comment, but we won't have a seat at the table. We'll have the same level of input as someone from New Jersey or California. It's unfortunate the program wasn't preserved.'

Norton Sound commercial chum fishery off to good start

Weak runs of king salmon and sockeye come in as expected

By Laurie McNicholas

Norton Sound salmon runs are coming in as expected with aboveaverage returns of chum salmon and weak runs of kings and sockeye as of June 30, reports Jim Menard, area manager for Norton Sound and Kotzebue, Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game. "The strong run of chum salmon has resulted in some capacity issues with tender availability,' Menard said. "The department is working with the buyer in determining fishing time by subdistrict based on tender availability and plant capacity."

The commercial chum harvest opened June 20 in subdistricts 2 (Elim) and 3 (Golovin). By month's end 16 Elim permit holders had caught 9,295 chums, and 8 Golovin permit holders had taken 13,700 chums. Menard said these are the best catches for June in more than 20 years in each subdistrict.

"It's pretty good," said Elim Elder Charles Saccheus of the commercial chum harvest in his area. "I hope it keeps up. A good number of chums were caught in the subsistence harvest before the commercial That really helps opening. financially." Saccheus spoke with The Nome Nugget by phone from

The Board of Fisheries has classified the chum stock in the Elim and Golovin subdistricts as a stock of yield concern since 2000 due to a chronic inability to meet escapement Chum runs have been insufficient to allow for a commercial harvest in either subdistrict in most years since 2003, according to ADF&G reports. However, in 2010 the chum run was strong enough to reach escapement goals and conduct commercial harvests in both subdistricts.

The following summary of fishing activities in other Norton Sound subdistricts and the Port Clarence district is based on Menard's update.

Unalakleet and Shaktoolik

A subsistence fishing schedule is in effect in subdistricts 5 (Unalakleet) and 6 (Shaktoolik). For the marine waters in both subdistricts the schedule is 6 p.m. Monday until 6 p.m. Wednesday and from 6 p.m. Thursday until 6 p.m. Saturday. For the Unalakleet River drainage the schedule is from 8 a.m. Monday until 8 p.m. Tuesday and from 8 a.m. Friday to 8 p.m. Saturday. Gillnets in the Unalakleet River drainage are restricted to 6 inches or less stretched mesh gillnets fishing period for the Unalakleet subdistrict was a 24-hour opener that began at 8 a.m. July 2 for the southern portion of the subdistrict from the regulatory marker at the northern end of Big Lake to the tip of Black Point. The first commercial fishing opening in the Shaktoolik subdistrict was a 24-hour period that began at 6 p.m. July 3. Nets are restricted to 100 fathoms or less and gillnet mesh size is restricted to 6 inches or less stretched mesh in the Shaktoolik subdistrict Commercial fishing openings in both subdistricts were delayed to protect king salmon returning to those areas.

Norton Bay subdistrict

No commercial fishing periods have yet been announced for the Norton Bay subdistrict. This is the first year for the Inglutalik River tower project, and no escapement goals have been established. Cumulative counts at the tower through June 30 were 417 king salmon and 1,776 chums.

Nome subdistrict

A subsistence set gillnet schedule is in effect from 6 p.m. Wednesday until 6 p.m. Saturday in marine waters of the Nome subdistrict. The fresh water subsistence area schedule is from 6 p.m. Monday until 6 p.m. Wednesday and from 6 p.m. Thursday until 6 p.m. Saturday. Beach seining will be allowed until further notice in all subsistence areas during the gillnet schedule, except for the Penny River and Cripple River where no chum salmon harvest is allowed.

On June 30 aerial surveyors noted a couple of thousand chum salmon from the Eldorado River weir to the mouth of the river. Aerial surveyors have noted a few hundred chums from the Nome River Bridge to the mouth of the river. Chum were jumping from the Bering Air site to the mouth of the Snake River. A lot more chum than sockeye have been passing the site of the Sinuk River video/weir.

No sockeye salmon had passed the Glacial Lake weir through June The escapement goal (aerial survey) is 800 to 1,600 sockeyes.

Port Clarence district

Catch reports are mixed in the Port Clarence district, which is expected this early in the season. Chum catches have been light. Some subsistence fishermen have reported weak sockeye catches.

the Pilgrim River weir as of June 28. The average quarter point for the sockeye run is July 10, and the average midpoint is July 16. The escapement goal at the weir (aerial survey at Salmon Lake and Grand Central tributary to Salmon Lake) is 4,000 to 8,000 sockeyes.

Red king crab fisheries

The Community Development Quota and open access red king crab fishery began June 28 in Norton Sound. The harvest quotas are 26,850 pounds of crab for the CDQ fishery and 331,150 pounds for the open access fishery.

Two buyers are registered for the crab fishery-Norton Sound Seafood Products and Aquatech. Aquatech is buying crab in the open access fishery, and NSSP is buying crab from the CDQ fishery. The NSSP is the designated buyer for CDO crab quota for Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. ### National Guard called in to medevac infant from Diomede

By Diana Haecker

The Alaska Army and Air National Guard was called in from Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson evacuate an 8-month-old baby girl and two highrisk pregnant women from Little Diomede last Monday.

Troopers requested help from the state's rescue coordination center and they sent out three rescue squadrons from the Alaska Air National Guard based at Elmendorf. "We talked to the doctor at Norton Sound Hospital in Nome, and were told that the infant had been in respiratory distress since approximately 4 a.m. and could go into respiratory failure at any time," said Master Sgt. Sal Provenzano, the officer in charge. "The requesting physician said the health aide on the island had limited medical skills and didn't know how to intubate, so if the infant went into respiratory failure it could be fatal."

The rescue squadrons flew with a helicopter and a Hercules plane to Nome to meet with the Alaska Army National Guard. In Nome, four "Guardian Angels" boarded a Black Hawk helicopter and flew to Little Diomede. They arrived on Little Diomede late in the afternoon and picked up the baby, its mother and two pregnant women who were in need of medical attention as well, according to the RCC. The Black Hawk stationed in Nome could not be launched when the call for help came in, National Guard spokeswoman Sgt. Karima Turner said, because the flight crew was short a crew chief. The chief is currently on deployment in Iraq. The patients were flown to Nome and released to Norton Sound Regional Hospital for medical attention. Turner said that a civilian helicopter that is under contract in Nome has been un-manned

FIRST CRUISE SHIP OF THE SEASON— On June 29, the cruise ship MS Bremen docked at the Nome port, bringing in about 100 visitors mostly from Germany.

First cruise ship of the season makes landfall in Nome

By Diana Haecker

The first visitors to arrive by ship this summer season came into Nome last week with the Hapag-Lyod cruise ship MS Bremen. About 90 cruise tourists, mostly from Germany, disembarked on the morning of June 29 and were greeted by four Nome tour guides to give them the grand tour of Nome, a gold panning and sled dog demonstration and completed with lunch at Old St. Joe's Hall and free time to roam Front Street.

The MS Bremen had started their voyage in Asia, making maiden calls to never before visited ports on the Russian Chukchi Peninsula.

Nome was the first stop in Alaska. The end of their three-week journey neared as they got on a flight back to Anchorage and the second group came in to board the Bremen. Christopher Hudson, group tour coordinator with All Alaska Tours based in Anchorage, said that 105 visitors were starting their journey that takes them from Nome to the Aleutian Islands, Kodiak and Seward to the Inside Passage and on to Vancouver, Canada.

The MS Bremen's sister ship, the

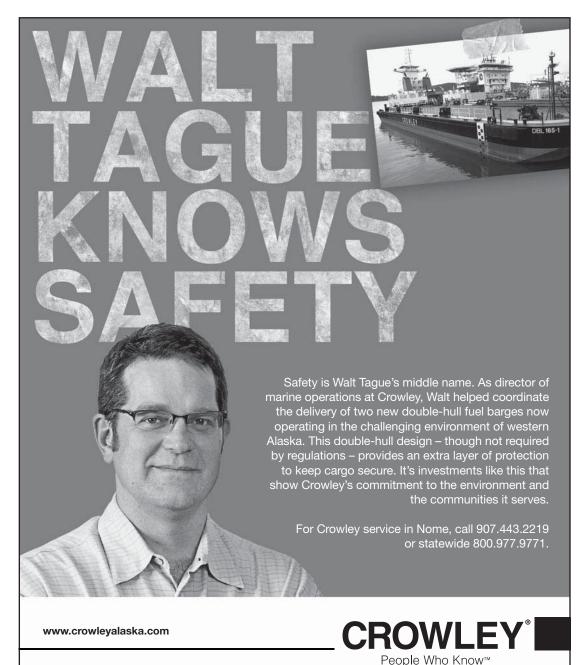

MS Hanseatic, is cruising the eastern part of the Northwest Passage. The Bremen will come back to Nome in August to start a 25-day journey through the Northwest Passage. The route follows the Northern Alaskan coastline, through the Canadian Arctic and on to Reykjavik, Iceland. The MS Bremen has a capacity of 120 cruise guests.

Sun shines on Nome's Independence Day festivities

It was 31°F, calm and sunny when 29 runners gathered on Front Street at 8 a.m. to set off on the 34th Anvil Mountain Run. As is tradition, the 11-mile run marks the beginning of Nome's Fourth of July festivities.

Despite the glorious morning sun, the temperatures were frigid enough that the fireweeds sagged under the cold, runner Harry Karmun remarked. Organizer Leo Rasmussen was pleased that the number of runners rose from one signed up the day before to the final 29 participants.

On their marks, ready, set, go and off they went to race north of town to Anvil Mountain, ascend the steep road - or whatever alternative route to the White Alice site, across the ridge to Anvil Rock and then down across fundra and rocky terrain to make it back to Nome's Front Street.

Nils Hahn was the first to cross the finish line, followed by Nathaniel Olson and Phil Hofstetter. The first woman to arrive at the finish was Crystal Tobuk. Greg Finstad rounded master's age group to finish the run.

As runners kept coming in, the crowds flocked to Front Street and got ready for the parade themed "God bless America." But before that, mayor Denise Michels held a short speech in celebration of the 235th birthday of an independent America. Joy Rose led the singing of the National Anthem and the Alaska Flag Song. The Girl Scouts led the Pledge of Allegiance and the Boy Scouts were Color Guards. Rev. Julie Elmore gave an invocation.

Michels acknowledged the men and women serving in the military and veterans for upholding this country's freedom. She also reminded the people that the founding fathers envisioned government by the people and for the people and therefore holding elected officials responsible. "We must be vigilant in voicing our concerns," Michels said.

Nome is first "Let's Move" community in Alaska

Summercise connects with First Lady's initiative to fight childhood obesity

By Diana Haecker

Judging from the excitement that permeated the Rec Center last week just before an end-of-the-session Summercise performance, Nome kids don't need any incentive to move. They were bursting with energy to show off what they learned over the past two weeks of Summer-

This year, 148 kids are signed up for Summercise, a summer exercise program organized by Norton Sound Health Corporation's CAMP office. In an end-of-the-session performance, they showed dance routines learned in various Summercise classes, gave gymnastics performances and demonstrated various NYO skills. And in the end, they told their audience on the packed bleachers the message they've been learning for the past two weeks of Summercise: Don't drink pop; eat fresh fruits and vegetables and exer-

Kelly Keyes, CAMP director, explained that Summercise has been around for 12 years now and each year it grows on some level.

The mission of the summer program is to educate kids on healthy nutrition and to promote exercise. The busy Monday through Friday schedule of the first session included cooking classes, dance classes, ball games, gymnastics, Native Youth Olympic disciplines and swimming classes. The team provides nutritional information and teaches classes. It includes eight Summercise interns - mostly nutrition students and dietitians from universities across the nation — nine local high school assistants, three Baptist Church interns and CAMP staff.

Building on what Summercise has already done over the last decade to fight diabetes, Nome recently became the first city in Alaska to take part in First Lady Michelle Obama's initiative to fight childhood obesity and diabetes, when Mayor Denise Michels declared Nome a "Let's Move" city.

Staggering statistics say that over the last 30 years the occurrence of childhood obesity has tripled in the U.S. with one out of three kids being overweight. Obesity rates among pre-schoolers ages 2 to 5 also have doubled in the past four decades, and one in five children is overweight or obese by the time they reach their sixth birthday. The enemy comes in the form of empty calories in sugary drinks, snacks and hours and hours inactively spent in front of the TV or

Keyes said that the "Let's move" campaign builds on four cornerstones, namely to educate parents on healthy choices, improve nutrition in schools, increase the opportunities for kids to become physically active and to make healthy food affordable and accessible.

Keyes said the goal for this year is to get kids moving at least for 60 minutes a day. While not set in stone, Keyes said she hopes to organize activities throughout the year to keep the "Let's Move" initiative alive and kicking in Nome.

"Let's see how we can put Nome on the map as far as fighting child-hood obesity goes," Keyes said. "I think all of America is facing a childhood obesity problem and we're seeing it in Nome like anywhere else."

Keyes said that in addition to motivating movement, they also teach kids to read nutrition labels on food and beverage packages so that they become educated consumers."

Keyes said that children do remember what they learn in Summercise and pass on the message to their parents. "We see throughout the year that they talk about what they learned and we get reports from parents that kids are focused on making healthier choices," Keyes said.

The second session of Summercise starts on July 11.

How to treat and prevent a heart attack

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

This year over a million people in the United States will have a heart attack. Almost one-half will die from the attack, while those who survive may suffer irreversible heart damage.

Overall survival and the extent of heart damage related to a heart attack are dependent on how quickly symptoms are recognized and appropriately treated. A person having a heart attack must get to the hospital or village clinic immediately. As many emergency room physicians say, "Time is heart muscle."

A heart attack does not feel the same to everyone. Common symptoms include sudden pain in the left chest that may radiate to the jaw, inner left arm, or to the back. The pain is often confused with heartburn. Many people feel short of breath and weak, often with increased sweating and a fast heart rate for no easily explained rea-Some son. people describe feeling lightheaded or nauseated.

I have heard more than one patient say, "It felt like a moose was sitting on my chest, and I couldn't breathe.' These symptoms must not be ignored. Every second counts. The sooner a person gets to medical help, the more likely doctors can initiate treatment to prevent further heart A heart attack is caused by a sudden blood clot lodged in an artery to the heart. The clot prevents the flow of oxygen and nutrients to the heart muscle. Unless flow is restored, the heart muscle dies in a matter of minutes to hours. Medically treating a heart attack is like trying to rapidly clear a plugged drain. A person with symptoms should take a full strength aspirin (unless there is an allergy to aspirin) while awaiting medical transport. This helps make platelets in the blood less sticky, thereby stopping the process of clot formation. In the hospital, doctors often give clot-busting medications or perform procedures to clear the blockage.

It is important to remember that heart attacks are usually predictable and preventable. The attack itself is the end result of a process that develops over decades. High blood pressure, unhealthy foods, and tobacco use cause small cracks to form in the inner wall of the blood vessels. The body tries to weld these cracks with cholesterol to prevent further damage, but over time these cholesterol patches, called plaques, become so large that blood flow becomes slow (like a slow drain). Why do we wait until a funeral to pay respects to our fellow man?

Recently, on July 4, as we celebrated this nation's independence, I reflected again on two individuals — former presidents John Adams and Thomas Jefferson — who didn't wait until their demise to pick up their relationship with

In a surprising twist in American history, both John Adams and Thomas Jefferson died on the same day — July 4, 1826. Well aware that the nation was preparing to celebrate its 50th anniversary, both had desired to see that monumental celebration. Jefferson actually died early that morning of July 4, 1826, in his Monticello home in Virginia. Adams, 91, died only hours later. Not knowing of course that Jefferson had passed on, Adams' last words were, "Jefferson still lives.' These two died perhaps best friends.

Their friendship was not an easy road. At one point, Adams and Jefferson had a terrible falling apart.

Jefferson and Adams worked closely together on writing the Declaration of Independence. They held mutual respect for one another's intellect and commitment to the common good. As years passed their friendship grew through their involvement in government, diplomacy, and the joys and griefs of family life.

In 1801, after what had been a controversial political campaign, Jefferson defeated Adams in the presidential election. That campaign would make some of our current politics look mild in comparison. Newspapers—the media of the day - reported biting comments about the two individuals. Miscommunication of each other's actual views ran amuck. Adams did not even wait for Jefferson to arrive at the White House and "transfer" the nation's presidency. He left in the early hours, thus avoiding looking at his old friend. For 11 years Jefferson and Adams did not speak nor correspond with one

The relationship could have been left just like that, unreconciled. Instead one of them made the first move. In 1812, John Adams picked up his pen and wrote a letter to Jefferson. It is said that Adam's wife, Abigail, had been encouraging him to do so for years. These two strong individualists who bore good "reason" to dislike one another because of past deeds and treatment, set that aside. The years had matured them. What had been a passionate disregard, transformed into a renewed beginning. In the last 14 years of their lives, they exchanged over 150 letters. These letters have survived the ages and give testimony to a deepened regard. Filled with grace and wit, the correspondence covers a variety of topics from family to politics.

God's reconciling power can be manifested in our relationships when one person takes the first step and ends up opening a door that extends into the future. We need not wait until a funeral to take that step.

and commission members serve "at the pleasure of the governor," but not all. Several of these entities, such as the Board of Fish and the Labor Relations Agency, have to be removed for cause. The logic behind this is that these entities deal with contentious issues and require a certain amount of security to adequately address the issues before them. Not everyone agrees that the Coastal Zone Management board should require this standard.

After failing to reach resolution on these issues during our first special session, members of the House and Senate worked toward a compromise and we met on June 27 to try and save the program. Ultimately House and Senate discussion on the bill was irrelevant. The Governor announced that it was too late to save the program and if the legislature passed the bill he would veto it. The office of 30 people had been "decimated" to 5 and would be unable to process 100 projects a month the office would be receiving. According to the administration, without the ability to set up a transitionary period all projects would have to be shelved until the office could be rebuilt. Eighteen of us in the House thought this obstacle could be overcome but that was not enough. While the loss of this program is very unfortunate, it is not the end of the story. We look forward to legislation authorizing a new program and hope that, starting from scratch, a compromise can be met.

The Governor has come out with his Capitol and Op-Over $400 million erating Budget vetoes. ($400,281,328) was cut from the Capitol budget; of that $5,314,200 or about 1 percent came out of House District 39. In all, six of our projects were vetoed, two of these projects were for public safely buildings. I think all of the projects for District 39 are important to their respective communities and would not recommend any for the chopping block. In the end no one is happy about losing projects to the red pen but we have to be realistic that every district is going to have to share the burden. On a statewide level, the Weatherization and Energy Rebate programs were both reduced by $12.5 million, but that left a healthy $64 million and $37.5 million, respectively. The Operating Budget vetoes consisted of $12.1 million reduction in debt service. Collectively this leaves the remainder of spending on rural issue untouched, including $400 million for the Power Cost Equalization. Please contact my office with any questions you have or to get details on your community's projects.

Sitnasuak has just placed great trust in the Native games program in Nome Public Schools. They expect through their support a program of our Alaskan Culture. The Alaska Army National Guard has, in the past, conducted small arms and maneuver training exercises in many locations across Alaska. Over the last years these previously used sites have been inspected and/or evaluated as part of the Military Munitions Response Program (MMRP). Taking into consideration various factors relating to safety and environmental hazard potential, the Alaska Army National Guard intends to apply the Munitions Response Site Prioritization Protocol (MRSPP) at the site listed below. Through direction provided by Congress, the Department of Defense (DoD) has developed the MRSPP to assign priority for cleanup to sites of suspected unexploded ordnance, discarded military munitions or munitions constituents.

MMRP Locations	Point of Contact	Phone Number
Holy cross	Holy Cross Village	(907) 476-7124
Huslia	Huslia Village	(907) 829-2294
Golovin	Chinik Eskimo Community	(907) 779-2214
Kaltag	Village of Kaltag	(907) 534-2224

The Army and the Alaska Army National Guard are in the process of completing a Site Inspection for sites listed above, and shall evaluate sites by applying the MRSPP. The MRSPP Evaluation criteria includes assessing types of munitions that may be potentially present, assessing land uses, determining ease of access to sites, and quantifying the number of people with access to sites. Information collected will be used to apply the MRSPP and will be made available for public review in accordance with the 32 CFR part 179 requirements.

You are invited to review the MRSPP and provide comment to the Alaska Army National Guard. If you have or would like additional information about these munitions response sites or other potential munitions response sites associated with the Alaska Army National Guard, please contact Jennifer Nutt at (907) 428-6760 or jennifer.nutt@alaska.gov.

TESTIMONY— Eskimo Walrus Commission director Vera Metcalf and Sitnasuak Native Corp. president Chuck Fagerstrom testified at the Northern Waters Task Force meeting held at Old St. Joe's Hall on Friday, July 8.

Common Council considers board memberships

Mayor Michels pins back Andersen's ears

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Common Council met Monday to pass a couple action items and to chew the fat briefly over the future of sales tax, fluoride pollution, interlaced advisory and governing board memberships, and road improvements.

The Council voted unanimously to adopt the Alaska Municipal League and Joint Insurance Association's safety incentive plan for FY 2012 with the stated aim to "target loss control," and to provide a safe, costeffective environment for its employees, citizens, and the visiting public. However, no copy of the risk management plan was included among meeting documents provided the public. The Council needs to adopt the plan annually, according to the city manager, Josie Bahnke.

The Council reversed itself on a vow made during budget time that waiving fees for the use of public facilities would halt, and Monday approved a $250 fee waiver application from Northern Waters Task Force for a meeting at Old St. Joe's on July 8. The task force is a group of State Representatives and private business people appointed by Legislature to look out for Alaska's interests and to keep the State at the forefront of U.S. Arctic policy in transportation, resource development and national se-

Unknowns persist on the Last Frontier

By Diana Haecker

In their first meeting in Nome, the Northern Waters Task Force assemd for a full day of testimony and public comment last Friday at Old St. Joe's Hall. The task force was set up by the Alaska State legislature in 2010 to deal with arctic governance, oil and gas development, Arctic fisheries and increased marine transportation. The panel's chairman Kotzebue Representative Reggie Joule said in an introduction that the task force seeks input from locals on subsistence practices, on what is needed in terms of facilities and infrastructure when dealing with the potential of increased shipping.

After hours of expert and scien- vast resources that could be extific testimony, it became clear that ploited for their developing indeed the Arctic is the last frontier economies. Clear frustration rang in and more unknowns persist. It truly is the last Wild West for the lack of rules and laws that govern the circumpolar Arctic and the narrow strait leading into it, the Bering Strait. Task force member U.S. Coast Guard Rear Admiral Thomas Ostebo remarked that the Coast Guard's expected to police the area, but has its hands tied as there are no United States laws to enforce. The Bering Strait is not only a choke but is also an international strait under international laws in the absence of a set of laws governing the straits.

While ice locked up the ocean and made reliable passage impossible, it also locked up the earth's last known, exploitable riches - oil, gas and other minerals. With a warming arctic and rapidly melting multi-year ice, this has changed. As a result of this, everybody wants a piece of the pie. The eight arctic nations - US, Canada, Greenland/Denmark, Norway, Russia, Iceland, Sweden and Finland - jockey for position to claim their stakes. Nations like China and Korea are building ice breakers and have interests in the testimonies given by Oceanographic and Atmospheric arctic researcher Dr. Kathleen Crane, when she said there are huge gaps in data that her agency is supposed to deliver, but there is not enough federal funding to do the research. US researchers need to charter ships sailing under foreign flags to get them to their data collecting moorings in the Bering Strait. The problem, many said, is that Congress in D.C. fails to understand that the US is an Arctic nation and with that they fail to understand the urgency of the rapidly occurring changes that affect the Arctic, climate wise as well as politically in the national and international arena.

Members of the task force included chair Reggie Joule, Rep. Bob Herron, Rep. Neal Foster, Senator Donnie Olson, Dept. of Environmental Conservation commissioner Larry Hartig, Nome Mayor Denise Michels, US Coast Guard Rear Admiral Thomas Ostebo and NANA Corp. vice president Chuck Greene. They pondered questions of monu-

Extortion? Blackmail? Hostages? Sometimes we wonder about the motivation of politicians. Why is Congress making such a fuss about raising the debt ceiling? During the George W. Bush presidency they raised it seven times. Are our GOP leaders so hell-bent on their ideological agenda that they are willing to bring on the unthinkable?

We used to have faith that our politicians would do the correct thing to govern wisely, but now we have a bunch of ultra-conservatives of the GOP's Tea Party wing who would like nothing better than to make President Obama look bad. This is not good government. They would rather plunge our nation into deeper financial crisis and economic slowdown than do anything that might put the President in a good light. These same pea-brained politicians got their shorts in a wad during a recent round of debt ceiling negotiations when the Democrats argued that if we are in such a financial mess we should bring in more revenue by eliminating tax breaks for the hedge fund managers and corporate jet owners, as well as cutting aid to the poor. As soon as this was proposed the Republicans got in a snit and walked out of the talks.

One could suspect that the Republicans actually want the economy to do poorly. It seems hard to believe that they would go to such extremes just to make the President look bad, but they might just end up shooting themselves in the foot. President Obama is correct in asking that the loopholes and tax breaks for the billionaires be closed. He needs to stand firm on this concept. The public would only be too happy to share our tax burden with the mega wealthy. - N.L.M.-

A BEAUTIFUL PLACE BY ANY OTHER NAME — This photo "Kuzgamapa Hot Springs, Kougarok, Alaska" was taken by F.H. Nowell on July 11, 1907. Back then it was a journey from Nome of about two days to arrive at what is today known as Pilgrim Hot Springs.

Road construction underway in Nome and region

By Diana Haecker

Driving through town means navigating a maze of closed-off roads and finding alternative routes to one's destination. Different projects are underway in and outside of town. There is the ongoing Nome Joint Utilities water and sewer upgrade on Fifth Avenue between G Street and Steadman. At the same time, the Department Transportation also works on Fifth Avenue as part of their Nome Roads Project, which is funded with American Recovery Reinvestment Act money. The DOT Nome Roads project includes work on G Street, K Street, Fifth Avenue between G and K streets, and the Nome Bypass Road.

Contractor Twin construction is doing the work on the Nome Roads project. The primary focus is to give the roads better structural integrity and to provide proper drainage so that water doesn't sit on the roads and destroy them, explained Lisa Coyle, Department of Transportation western district construction engineering manager. On K Street, workers are replacing the top two feet of gravel material with engineered soil and will top it off with three inches of pavement. There will be several drainage ditches and culverts to drain water.

On Fifth Avenue, excavation work started to put down new material in several parts of the road. In parts of Fifth Avenue where the gravel didn't fail, there will be 2 to 4 inches of asphalt added to the existing pavement.

G Street gets a new material foundation as well and a layer of pavement. H Street won't see any paving, but there will be improvements to the structural foundation of the road. The first foot and a half will be excavated. replaced with new foundation and a nice smooth surface. "In all of those roads we're working on drainage,' said Coyle. "We will add ditches and drainage culverts, put in new basins to catch sediments. It's nice to have pavement, but to keep roads in good condition, they need to be dry and we need to make sure that drainage issues are taken care of," Coyle said.

This year, the contractor continues work that started last year on the Nome Bypass Road. Last year, recycled asphalt was put down between Nome-Beltz Highway and N Street on the bypass road. This summer, the recycled asphalt material will be put on top of the road between N Street and the intersection to the Nome-Council Highway. It also needs final grading and compaction. Coyle said that Twin Peaks is under contract to complete work on the Nome Roads project by the end of July.

Twin Peak spokesperson Matt Early said that they are also working on Nome Eskimo Community roads projects, which are on 4th Avenue, a part of Bering Street, sections of Warren Place and smaller side roads like West C and D streets to top the gravel roads with recycled asphalt material. Early said the recycled material binds like gravel but is more flexible than payement and thus it prevents heaving and cracking from the frost. The NEC community roads project is slated for completion by the end of July.

Once the Nome Roads Project is stitched up, Twin Peaks is scheduled to improve bridges for the DOT beginning in August. Most of the work is on abutments of bridges on the Nome-Teller Highway. The Tisuk and Sinuk river bridges will see small riprap placed around the bases of the abutment to keep the soil from further eroding. Bridges across the Feather River, Eldorado Creek, Goldrun Creek and Bluestone River are going to be worked on as well. The scope of work is to widen the shoulders of the road leading up to the bridges. The same is to be done on the Kougarok Road, on the bridges leading across the Kuzitrin and Kougarok rivers. The project curity. Rep. Reggie Joule, D-District 40 chairs the committee of which Mayor Denise Michels is a member.

Some oil and gas industry, mining interests, Resource Development Council and the Alaska Chamber of Commerce opposed the formation of the task force. They say the task force will strengthen the idea that Arctic waters are in need of environmental regulation and transfers state constitutional powers to rural entities. Kotzebue, Nome and Barrow are vying for a deep-water port.

"I think they [task force] do a lot of good for Nome," Councilwoman Mary Knodel said.

Fluoride question coming up

John Handeland, Nome Joint Utilities System manager, assured the Council he would have fluoride information for them at the next meeting. The City of Fairbanks has discontinued putting fluoride, a long held convention for prevention of tooth decay, into its municipal drinking water supply. The action followed a task force study that showed Fairbanks water already had naturally occurring fluoride. In January 2011, the U.S. Dept. of Health and Human Services said fluoride in drinking water should be reduced to 0.7 p.p.m. Nome Joint Utility System accounting shows that the utility would save at least $30,000 annually by following the Fairbanks example. The idea has some backing from the NJUS Board of Directors as a costcutting decision or to get the fluoride out of the City's water.

On another topic, Handeland reported that the price of oil to come across the dock for NJUS generators would be known Wednesday. That price affects the price on Nome electricity bills this winter.

Tagging ramshackle structures for abatement has been delayed pending a public hearing to be scheduled soon. One offensive house at the corner of Lomen Avenue and West E Street, where inhabitants had been misplacing honeybucket products, has windows and doors boarded closed.

Finally, Mayor Denise Michels exerted her authority in vetoing a resolution the Council passed in her absence June 27, appointing John Bahnke, subsistence fisher, to the Port Commission, and not reappointing Jimmy Adams to his seat. Michels had recommended the reappointment of Jeff Darling and Jimmy Adams. Adams, Bahnke, Darling and Emory C. Wheeler had applied to fill two seats after Adams and Darling's terms expired.

It was the mayor's power to appoint, Michels said. Per law, Michels had to veto the action before the next Council meeting and give a written reason. The veto can be overridden by a vote of two-thirds of the Council.

The veto letter quotes Councilman Stan Andersen, acting chair of the June 27 meeting when Bahnke was appointed.

"And, the idea, is and this has nothing to do with anyone else, but I think these Commissions ought to be changed every five years, it shouldn't be an appointment for life. Actually, I don't think elected officials should be serving on these, we should open them up for more public. And nothing against the elected officials that are serving, next to me, and across," Andersen was quoted.

"I am my own grandpa."

Councilman Jim West, Jr. is also the head of the Port Commission. Councilman Jerald Brown is also on the Nome Planning Commission. Newly reappointed Port Commissioner Jeff Darling also serves on the Nome Planning Commission. Jimmy Adams serves on the Nome Planning Commission and the Port Commission. This means Council members approve work they did on commission.

Michels read her statement to the Council, which said that currently no law forbids doubling up on positions on elected and appointed governing bodies.

"If the Council wants to establish term limits for various commissions than [sic] an ordinance needs to be codified," Michels' statement read. "If the Council wants to ban Council members from being appointed to the various commissions, an ordinance needs to be codified."

Michels asked the Council's support on appointing Adams and got a

"I apologize to both Jim and John," Andersen said, and added that if he wanted to change things, the only way would be to run for mayor. "It is obvious to me it is the only way to change things."

"You can change things, Michels said. You can change the ordinance."

-numental proportions. The phrase responsible development was mentioned in the same breath as maintaining sustainable environments. Who will govern access to Arctic resources? In the absence of an international treaty or the unratified Law of the Sea convention, how will cooperation between Arctic nations work? Will there be cooperation or bitter competition in the rush for the last undepleted stocks of resources may it be oil, gas, or fish? And who'll be called to the rescue when ships sink or oil spills need mopping up on ice-choked seas?

Mayor Michels delivered testimony on behalf of the City of Nome stressing the need for more infrastructure and better harbor facilities. The City has been tracking vessel dockings and Michels said the trend is clear: there were 3 to 4 dockings in 1990; in the summer of 2009; there were 304 dockings at Nome's port. Barges, research vessels, cruise ships and even privately owned yachts are calling on the Port of Nome and with the opening of the Northwest Passage, traffic will likely only get busier. Michels said that Nome is well poised with its existing infrastructure, hotels, tank farms, even the land fill, and three daily flights to Anchorage to accommodate more marine traffic coming on land, but to get them here, the existing causeway would need an additional 800 feet to safely dock vessels with deeper draft. To get to minus 35 feet, the projected costs are between $100 to $150 million. She commented that there is a need to create marine lanes at the chokepoint of the Bering Strait to avoid user conflict with subsistence fishermen of Little Diomede. Also, she said, locals feel strongly about being included at the table and to have the Law of the Sea ratified. Chuck Greene suggested that Kotzebue, Barrow and Nome form an alliance or some kind of entity to make sure their interests are considered.

Stephen Boardman with the Army Corps of Engineers admitted that the Corps in the past only built harbors after looking at the individual merit of the project and the community's need. The Corps only recently discovered that harbors are actually a system that should be viewed as a whole. In that vein, the Corps and the State of Alaska hosted a Alaska Regional Ports conference that resulted in an overwhelming mandate, Boardman said, to collaborate and to form comprehensive planning and leadership and to develop a ports and harbor plan for Alaska.

The Corps also initiated a study that looks at potential sites for Arctic deep draft harbors. The next step, Boardman said, would be to request information from the public. In closing, just like many other presentations that preceded or followed Boardman's, he said that funding constraints limit the action.

State Department of Transportation engineer Michael Lukshin talked about a planning charette – an intense planning session to work on a vision for development – that was held in May. Lukshin said the driver of port development is economic development and that the limiting factor in cost effective development in northern Alaska is the lack of infrastructure paired with funding challenges. And then came a chilling statement. "In absence of state and federal funds, private interests are likely to develop ports," Lukshin said.

In conclusion, Lukshin said there are yet many unknowns. Where should a port be located in Western Alaska? Mapping is insufficient and who would be responsible for a port if the private sector finances ports anyway? "As an interim solution, we need to finish the Arctic port study by 2015 and broaden our outreach to engage industry and communities," said Lukshin.

Taking in the information, Reggie Joule commented, "The more I hear, the more I understand the enormity of where we try to get and how we get there." Especially when it comes to making sure that local voices are heard and taken into account, Boardman with the Corps pointed out that the next steps need to include testimony from the public that will be most affected. "There is going to be competition between subsistence use and bringing in a containership," Boardman said. "We need to figure out how to make that compatible. Rep. Foster asked what kind of response the private sector is bringing to the table, but Lukshin had no answer. "It's too early in the process," Lukshin said.

The Coast Guard is also doing a study, the Bering Strait Port Access Route Study, and as presenter Capt. Adam Shaw stressed, it has little to do with port sites, but with figuring out safe access routes for vessels to and from ports. The study looks at navigational hazards, traffic patterns, HEADING INTO STORMY SEAS— The city of Nome collects data on ship dockings, which increased from 4 in 1990 to 304 in 2009. City of Nome Mayor Denise Michels testified to the need of Nome's port to expand for the safety of the expected increase in maritime traffic in the northern Bering Sea.

With the multitude of agencies conducting all kinds of studies, it is impossible for even interested citizens to stay informed and on top of public comment periods. In order to garner more input, Shaw said that the public comment period for the Bering Strait access study has been extended until September. "I would

Fishery Management Council, the Russians, the State of Alaska, locals, subsistence users, whale and walrus commissions and environmental groups concerned about degradation of the last undeveloped frontier. It's an impossible task to get routes figured out that would please every one of these competing interests. And, said Shaw, the powerful oil and gas industry has been reluctant to provide the Coast Guard with input on the port access study. "They haven't given us what we want, but they wanted to see first what we have in terms of information," said Shaw.

The Coast Guard is stretched thin. The U.S. soon will only have two icebreakers left since The Polar Sea is about to be decommissioned and the Polar Star is in dry dock for repair. Shaw said the Healy is mostly funded by the National Science Foundation and thus has limited time for Coast Guard missions. Task force member Rear Admiral Ostebo said that the Bering Strait is an international. "There is very little we can do to enforce US law, because it's an international strait, "Ostebo said. "Today, we have a whole lot of traffic and there are no rules for us to enforce." He said that the NWTF could help to encourage comments that then will find their way in to recommendations and ultimately rules that would be enforceable.

With increased traffic it is a given that accidents are prone to happen. In Nome, harbormaster Joy Baker said that the city only provides near shore responses but the Coast Guard is responsible for offshore rescues.

Captain Adam Shaw also held a sobering report on response times for Coast Guard assets to emergencies in the Arctic. The Coast Guard's 17th Search and Rescue District covers an area of three million square miles, from Prince William Sound to the Arctic Ocean.

"Response to an incident in the Arctic could take multiple days and stretch our resources to the breaking point," said Shaw. The USA shares search and rescue responsibilities with seven other Arctic nations, and a recently signed SAR treaty has improved international cooperation in case of an emergency.

In September 2009, the MS Bremen, one of two cruise ships that use the Northwest Passage, requested a medevac when they were 50 nautical miles out of Barrow. And the Coast Guard had to respond.

However, there are no Coast Guard facilities in the Arctic, it would take USCG buoy tenders about 8 to 10 days to respond to an oil spill in the arctic. The Coast Guard conducted a reality check called Operation Crossroads, where they tested their capabilities. What was meant to be a one-day mission for a Hercules C-130 to fly to Bar-like to get more subsistence comments and responses from the region," Shaw said. "I want to understand the navigational hazards that ships face and I want to know how the area is used for subsistence."

Shaw testified that he's looking for more input on how, when and where subsistence activities are taking place.

At this point there is no ship reporting system in place in the Arctic. Shaw pointed out that there are many powerful competing demands on the Bering Strait chokepoint: Oil and gas industry, tribes, the North Pacific EXPERT TESTIMONY - Dr. Kathleen Crane with NOAA in her testimony stressed the need for more research to shape a better understanding of the arctic.

Scientist Dr. Kathleen Crane vented her frustration that NOAA needs the funds to improve their capabilities of observations in order to issue forecasts, predictions or warnings. Crane stressed the need to cooperate with other nations. "We need to improve our stewardship and management and research. In many parts of the Arctic region we don't even know what is living there," she said. Crane participates in a research mission called RUSALCA that investithrough the Bering Strait."

Crane also observed that six species of fish have extended their range further north than ever before. Lacking the baseline information, Crane said, "We are struggling to understand what has always been in the Arctic Ocean and what is migrating there.'

In terms of the speed of Arctic warming, Crane said that models predicting ice melt don't even come close to how fast the ice is melting. "An Arctic Ocean free of summer ice could be within 30 or 40 years," she said. This will cause the sea level to rise up to 1.6 meters by the year 2100. And that means a lot of coastal communities would have to pack up and move to higher ground. And this, in turn, explains why non-Arctic countries like China and Korea are very interested in the Arctic, for research as well as commercial gain.

Inuit Circumpolar Alaska President Jimmy Stotts addressed the task force and brought to light the dismal track record that State of Alaska officials have when it comes to engaging in dialogue or interest with the ICC or the Native community in Alaska.

Stotts said the ICC has extended invitations to Alaska's DNR commissioner and the commissioner for the Alaska Department of Health and Social Services to participate in highlevel meetings with Inuit and Arctic country leaders, but neither responded to the invitation.

Stotts said that it is becoming clear that the current state administration has little if any interest to cooperate with the Inuit. "When it comes to development our positions are miles apart and we can't seem to sit down and talk about it," Stotts said. "So, we will continue talking with our federal government and others that will listen." Members of the task force took the beating and asked what they could do to bridge the gap. Joule said that the Bush Caucus would work with the ICC. "We will try to encourage the administration to engage in greater participation," Joule said.

Public testimony followed and only four members of the public spoke. Sitnasuak President Chuck Fagerstrom extended an open hand in cooperation to the task force and said that while Sitnasuak is open to resource development it should be done in a prudent way.

Vera Kingeekuk Metcalf, director of the Eskimo Walrus Commission, said that as a native of St. Lawrence Island she and her people are concerned about the possibility of the trawling fleet moving north following the fish, concerned with the sea ice pattern and concerned about oil and gas activities. The walrus commission is also concerned about the implications of the Endangered Species listings of the polar bears and the potential for the listing of walrus. Metcalf said there are concerns about increased ship strikes of whales colliding with boats and rope entanglements.

Rose Fosdick, vice president of the Natural Resources Division at Kawerak said that Native hunters in the area express fear that increased shipping and marine traffic would displace the area's resources. Fosdick echoed concerns of oil and fuel spills and irreversible pollution that could spoil the marine life that sustains the people living in the region. "We will be the ones most likely to bear the risks and possible destruction of our resources, so please keep us local people in mind," she said.

Prior meetings were held in Anchorage, Barrow, Girdwood and Kotzebue. The task force will complete their statewide hearings with meetings in Bethel and Unalaska.

STORMY SEAS - A storm that brought fierce winds and heavy rain to Nome whipped up the Bering Sea on Wednesday, July 6. Almost a week earlier, two Russian kite-boarders set out to cross the Bering Strait from Chukotka to the Seward Peninsula.

Russians kite-surf across the Bering Strait

By Diana Haecker

Far away from where kite surfing had its first beginnings at the shores of the Hawaiian Island of Maui. where a Frenchman by the name of Manu Bertin and his big wave buddies Laird Hamilton and Dave Kalama fiddled with the invention of the lofty new sport, a Russian duo managed to do the impossible last week and kite-boarded across the Bering Strait.

A week before the Northern Waters Task force assembled in Nome to discuss the realities of increased ship traffic, the two Russians proved the case in point and added a new dimension to marine traffic across the Bering Strait. They kite-surfed across the bottleneck, where two oceans with all their might squeeze unimaginable amounts of waters in opposite directions

It would be scary enough to try the crossing by boat, but call it courageous or foolish, the two athletes did it propelled by nothing more than their 12-square meter seaworthy kites and their feet strapped to a light weight four-finned boards resembling a wakeboard. The two Rus-33-year-old Evgeny Novozheev of Moscow and 29-yearold Konstantin Aksenov of St. Petersburg tried to follow in the footsteps of legendary French windsurfer Baron Arnaud deRosnay. DeRosnay crossed the Bering Strait in 1979 on a windsurf board. He went on many different windsurf forays before he disappeared in 1984 when he attempted to cross the Strait of Formosa between China and Tai-

The Russians were luckier and succeeded in crossing from Uelen on the Chukotkan Peninsula to Wales in Alaska. Inspired by deRosnay, they began preparing for their expedition in February, when kite boarding at the sunny island of Mauritius. Novozheev has the distinction of being the four-time Russian kite board champion. His partner Aksenov is a kite board instructor, leading kite safaris in Egypt, Monte Negro and Russia.

Back in Russia, they started preparing in earnest in colder temperature waters like the Baltic Sea and a lake near Moscow. While cold water, adverse weather and crazy currents are to be expected, the Russian adventurers had to also battle bureaucratic obstacles to obtain special permission to even get into Chukotka and permission to cross the border.

Since no border patrol waited for them at the international dateline between Big and Little Diomede, they had to get their stamp of departure from a military man who was flown in from Anadyr to Uelen.

Waiting for the slow wheels of bureaucracy to turn made them miss the perfect window of time when the weather was cooperating with sunny skies and perfect winds. The two Russians finally got their stamp and set out on July 1 to dare the crossing. They had hired two boats to escort the kite surfers to the internationaldate line.

From then on, they knew, they'd be on their own. However, the found themselves alone earlier than ex-seas calmed. Novozheev described that the water seemed to get warmer, but the weather changed every 15 minutes from clear blue skies to whiteout and fog conditions.

They made landfall in Wales at

The weather turned for the worse and big waves crashed into the boats, forcing them to turn around way before the dateline. The two adventurers were still in touch with each other via radio and had visual contact. However, Evgeny Novzheev said, it got pretty scary when the water was colder than they had ever experienced, when the boats had to leave and when they hit the choppy channel between Big and Little Diomede. "The water color was different, the waves seemed to come from every direction and crashed into each other," Novzheev explained.

In addition, two whales decided to check out the unusual creatures and came too close for comfort. Wave conditions flattened out as soon as they passed Little Diomede and the 2:30 a.m. — seven hours after they set off from Uelen, kissing the ground and being taken in by the local postmaster and his family. Asked if they would do this again, both vigorously shook their heads and said it was a pretty humbling experience.

The expedition cost the team approximately $80,000. The chartering of helicopters on the Russian side, Novozheev explained, can be pretty spendy. The team, sponsored by the sport gel Vivax, said they are submitting the necessary documents and paperwork to list their feat in the Guinness Book of World Records.

They said this is their first visit ever to the United States and they plan a warmer kite adventure maybe in the cradle of their sport, Maui.

Cavorting, flopping, diving, stopping, and, turning and twisting, swooping up along the sand—those were just the fishers, thrashing kneehigh in the waves, at one with the crying gulls, harvesting hundreds of cigar fish, shiny nutrition flashing along the East Beach.

The small fish—call them candlefish, cigar fish, hooligan-came ashore in batches, where local residents, eager to break their winter fish fast, came at them with dishpans, nets, big cans, hoop nets and even bed sheets, to collect hundreds to take home. Transferring from net to bucket or bag, some fell into the sand where quick hands scrambled to catch the wiggly little morsels of silver trying to head back to water.

"I came close, but no cigar fish," one lady quipped, turning out a net of gravel. Not to worry, the fishing was such fun that volunteers, like Shantah Esparza, who quickly caught on to the sport, generously helped others fill their containers.

Well, this is a fish story, mostly true. What is not true is that these fish were hooligan. They were not. Call them cigar fish, call them candlefish, but don't call them hooligan, the oily fish that range from northern California to southern Bering Sea coasts.

Not hooligan, said fish biologist Charley Lean. These fish, trying to have Saturday night and mate up in the shallows to spawn, were capelins. They are similar to other smelt, except for some big differences. Capelin inhabit the Arctic waters of Alaska's western coast, and Arctic waters off Newfoundland and Labrador. Unlike hooligan, capelin do not go into rivers where they were born to spawn. They lay eggs and fertilize them in the shallow intertidal zones. They spawn on sandy beaches at low tide when there is the least light. Midnight is a likely time, Lean said.

When it is time to reproduce, two male fish will glide up to a female and sandwich her in between them, then squeeze. Then the males will fertilize the roe.

"They prefer to mate by threes," Lean explained. "They're kind of kinky in the way they reproduce, you

But the folks gathering the fish were not asking them their names or species.

"I dunno," Diane Esparza said. 'This is the first time I fished for them.

Some people dip the fish, heads, tails and all, just big enough for a two or three mouthfuls, into flour and crisp them in a frying pan of butter. Others dredge them in beer batter and give them a warm reception in the deep fryer. Google the fish on the Internet and many pages of recipes

Later in the week, Ryan Martinson said he went home and snacked on some of the fish in the middle of the night.

"They were delicious, tasty," Martinson said. "We tried a few. We opened them with scissors and cleaned them, then floured them and put them in hot canola oil with a little butter for flavor. I made some home-made tartar sauce and we ate

One neighbor turned down a bag of fish.

"I just have never warmed to the taste," she said, offered some "hooligan." "They're too oily for me."

Capelin, as well as hooligan, are about oil, about grease, Lean said. Capelin are a very nutritious addition to the food chain.

"They are wonderful food, better than herring," he said. "They are a really important forage fish."

Biologists are tickled to see the capelins' return, one, because their appearance means Norton Sound is less salty and more hospitable, and two, because they are a rich source of food for sea birds, fish and mammals-seal, salmon, belugas, humpback whales, even humans.

They are super high in Omega 3 oil." Lean said.

There was a time in the early 1980s when the capelin were plentiful, so many that the state Dept. of Fish and Game investigated the feasibility of a commercial fishery for capelin. Then the numbers fell off and the runs became undependable. There was a time when there was an abundant capelin fishery around Newfoundland. (If one set sail from Maine heading to Greenland, the route would pass Newfoundland on Capelin have green backs and silvery sides. Females are slick and round; males have a fuzzy strip along their sides.

A female can lay 12,000 to 50,000 eggs. Most capelin spawn once, at four to six years old, and die. They are called candlefish because when dried and strung on a wick, the fish could be burned as a candle.

MISSION ACCOMPLISHED— The Nome Volunteer Fire Department responded on Saturday evening to a grease fire at Mark's Soap'n Suds on Front Street. will start in August and should be complete the end of September. A different contractor, Phillips and Jordan, is going to work for the DOT on mile 62 to mile 73.6 of the Nome-Council Highway. The project is to improve drainage of the road, install culverts and apply surfacing gravel. There will be two 36-hour closures of the road, to be advertised with a week in advance.

In the region, Kawerak is working on transportation projects that include a stretch of 2.7 miles of paved road in Gambell. Construction began last year and will finish this year with putting high float on the road. In Unalakleet, a project that began in 2009 will be finished this summer with asphalt pavement applied to 5.25 miles within the community. Kawerak's next phased construction projects, based on funding from the Bureau of Indian Affairs Indian Reservation Roads program, will be St. Michael Community Streets in 2012 and Stebbins Community Streets in 2013.

Aside from roads, Kawerak also has projects in the hopper that are currently in the planning stage with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers. The feasibility of a small boat harbor for Little Diomede is still being studied. The community got to see a draft report in 2010. This year a subsistence survey was completed and tidal data gathered. Denise Michels, Kawerak's vice president for Community Services Division, said in an email that the next step is to conduct an on-shore survey in the vicinity of the study area and single beam bathymetry. Limited air access to Diomede for the last several years has impacted the timeline of the project.

A project in Shaktoolik deals with a detailed erosion analysis with a draft report to be out in fall. It is to be presented to the community for comments. In Golovin, a study is underway to reduce storm damage.

NVFD responds to grease pot fire

By Diana Haecker

On Saturday evening the Nome Volunteer Fire Department was called out to Mark's Soap'n Suds to fight a grease fire in their kitchen.

According to firefighter Jerry Steiger, firefighters didn't need to use any water because employees had already extinguished the fire. Heavy smoke lingered in the building and firefighters went in with self-contained breathing apparatus to clear out the smoke with exhaust fans. Two fire engines responded and so did a host of firefighters. An ambulance stood by and Nome Police blocked off traffic on Front Street. Steiger said that there was only minimal damage, no personal injury or structural damage.

Healthspan: The healthy period of life

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

While the medical community tends to focus on a person's lifespan, Michael Thorner, an award winning endocrinologist who studies the effects of aging at the University of Virginia says we should focus on increasing what he calls healthspan, the period of life when people enjoy good health.

Interestingly, most of the important decisions that affect our healthspan are not made in a clinic. hospital room, emergency department.

Clearly what happens in the course of medical care is important. Many lives are saved when the right treatment is rendered at the right time. But most of the critical decisions, the ones that have a real impact on our health, occur not in some medical setting, but in our homes, at our places of work, and in our communi-

Life expectancy in the United States is now at an all time high. Whereas a person born in 1900 could expect to live about 47 years, a person living today will, on average, reach the age of 78.

It may surprise you to learn that medical care made a relatively small contribution to this increase in longevity. Vaccinations and antibiotics helped reduce infant mortality in the early 1900s and a handful of chronic disease medications like blood pressure medications have extended the lifespan of older persons in recent decades. However, it is the day-to-day decisions we make that have had a more profound effect on our lifespan than what we typically think of as healthcare.

The length of our life and quality of our health has more to do with what we choose to stock in our refrigerators and cupboards than the vitamins we keep in our medicine cabinet. In many studies, a healthy diet increases our sense of wellbeing and lowers our risk of cardiovascular disease, stroke, and diabetes as well as many medications.

Washing our hands, following safety guidelines at work, and staying physically active have given us more years of quality life than any modern medical advancement. Furthermore, exercise itself adds years of life to our brains, not just our bodies. The mere act of stopping smoking increases our life expectancy and slows the effects of aging more than blood pressure pills and cholesterol-lowering medications combined. Reading to our children and investing in their education has a more whether or not they have health incongregations statistically add years to our life.

Increasing our healthspan is not about merely counting calories or watching numbers on a blood pressure cuff or glucose meter. Healthspan is about increasing the quality of life. Years ago an older friend of mine, Mike Smithson, a man who harbored an inner source of health despite multiple medical problems, put it well when he said, "It's not about the quantity of life, it's about the quality.'

Medical care may supplement our pursuit of a full life, but increasing the healthspan, that period of life when we enjoy good health, requires daily decisions to do what is good for

NSEDC now accepting Outside Entity Funding applications

Submitted by NSEDC

Who better knows a community's needs than its leaders and residents? It is this philosophy that guides Norton Sound Economic Development Corp.'s Outside Entity

Funding program.
Since 2004, municipal, tribal and nonprofit organizations and agencies in NSEDC's 15 member communities have received more than $7 million to fund local and regional projects and priorities through the OEF program.

In 2010 and 2011, NSEDC budgeted $1 million each year for the program. Projects funded in 2010 covered a variety of needs and uses, including upgraded equipment and supplies for whaling crews in Diomede, a fishermen's floating dock in Koyuk, an elder and youth OEF program, there is nothing precluding fisheries-related projects from being considered through the community OEF process.

Over the years the program has undergone changes. For 2012, as with the previous two funding cycles, 90 percent of the available funding will be disbursed evenly among NSEDC's 15 member communities for projects conducted within that community. The remaining 10 percent will be reserved for project proposals from regional nonprofit entities.

Keeping with the idea that local knowledge and input are paramount to serving a community, OEF applications are first reviewed by a committee formed of the local community's representative to the NSEDC Board of Directors and at least two other community members. The committee forwards on applications to the full NSEDC Board for consideration.

FOOD SECURITY — A fishrack at the Teller beach, filled with chum salmon hanging to dry, is a sign of beauty. During discussions at the recent Northern Waters Task Force meeting, local concerns addressed how increased maritime traffic and potential resource development could affect the subsistence lifestyle in the region.

Redistricting lawsuit to be filed this week

By Diana Haecker

According to Fairbanks North Star Borough assembly member Tim Beck the borough is about to file a lawsuit challenging the plan that the Redistricting Board came up with and adopted last month. The current plan dramatically redrew district boundaries, expanding the Nome and Bering Strait district east to the Canadian border and south toward McCarthy. The North Star Borough also saw big changes under the new plan and sees itself divided into district 3-B and district 38-S. District 38 now encompasses the Denali Borough, Nenana and is stretching all the way to the Bering Sea and the Yukon-Kuskokwim Delta.

North Star borough attorney Jill Dolen declined to comment on the particulars of the complaint and said that the areas of concern were outlined in a resolution that the assembly passed last month. The resolution said that the redistricting plan unnecessarily divides the existing house district between two separate districts. The resolution states that the reapportionment plan violates the state constitutional standards of compactness, contiguity and socio-economic integration and fails to respect municipal and geographic boundaries.

The city of Ester and the Goldstream Valley would be separated from the borough's voting district and become part of district 38. Other boroughs also contemplated filing a lawsuit. The Aleutians East Borough assembly passed a resolution opposing the reapportionment of the Aleutians East Borough communities. The plan divides the Aleutians and the region into separate House and Senate districts. Mayor Stanley

Mack told the redistricting board that community leaders and residents want District 37 to remain as it was. "The Aleutians region is a special place. Our communities are tied together with similar economies based on commercial and subsistence fishing. We are mostly Aleuts who share a rich cultural heritage. But the board's final plan cuts Akutan off from the rest of our Borough communities. This is unacceptable to us," mayor Mack said.

The Aleutians East borough's resolution states that the result is the filing of an appropriate action in Superior Court. The resolution says the redistricting plan as is violates state law that "each house district shall be formed of contiguous and compact territory containing as nearly as practicable a relatively integrated socio-economic area."

The resolution further states that the 2011 redistricting plan is contrary to the Alaska Constitution and ignored the public process.

The Matanuska-Susitna Borough assembly passed a resolution last month that instructed the borough's attorney to file a suit against the redistricting plan, but mayor Larry Devilbiss overturned the resolution. "After due consideration and looking at the expense and the risk, I vetoed," deVilbiss said. The Mat-Su Borough, under the plan, gets six House Representatives and four Senators.

Senator Donnie Olson is among the legislators who have campaigned in 2010 and now have to do it all over again in a larger district, as elections will be conducted in 2012. Rep. Neal Foster's seat is also up for reelection in 2012.

The Alaska Democratic Party also weighed options to sue but is holding off for now. "Party members voted to be not a primary litigant but to help other entities in their efforts," said ADP chair Patti Higgins.

She said that the redistricting board deliberately tried to disenfranchise voters in several parts of Alaska. "I think it is morally wrong," Higgins said. "Make no mistake, we're going to fight really hard for a better redistricting map," Higgins added. Higgins said the party focuses on recruiting and supporting candidates to win upcoming elections.

The deadline to file litigation is July 13.

Any qualified voter can file a complaint against the Alaska Redistricting Board with the Alaska Superior Court within 30 days of final plan adoption. The board is scheduled to re-convene next Monday, on July 18, to address legal issues. The plan then has to be submitted to the U.S. Justice Department for review, which then has 60 days to approve or reject it.

School Board OKs one JROTC contract

Activities director's contract still hangs in limbo

By Diana Haecker

The Nome Public Schools Board met in a regular session last week to discuss two agenda items dealing with the three dorm rental units and the extension of contracts to two instructors for the JROTC program.

The board of education, with Gloria Karmun, Marie Tozier and Barb Nickels present, (Barb Amarok participated telephonically) voted unanimously to extend the contract for Sergeant First Class James Doll.

The contract for SFC Kevin Knowlton is still under consideration by the board because of a non-compliance issue with certification required from the military. School board member Barb Nickels explained that the JROTC program for Nome is on probation because of this issue that has not been resolved in the past two years.

Although the board had the contracts and job descriptions in front of them, questions arose - and couldn't be answered — as to how long it would take to get the proper certification and what the latest status of its progress is. According to NPS Superintendent Mike Brawner, Knowlton has been working on his certification. As board members requested more information, NPS Human Resources Director Bill Gartung said he has inquired with the military what exactly is missing from Knowlton's certification but could not obtain a concrete answer from the military side. According to an Army JROTC Instructor Certification application, an Army instructor needs to fulfill eligibility requirements, complete online initial qualification training and undergo an interview process. ### Trawl surveys underway in Norton Sound and north

By Diana Haecker

The 66-foot state-owned research trawler R/V Pandalus made it to Nome from its homeport of Homer last week to conduct several trawl surveys in Norton Sound and further north. Alaska Department of Fish and Game and Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. coordinated their needs to find out what's out there in the ocean, and how much of it. The state's ADF&G survey takes place roughly every three years and while fishermen have a good idea of what swims in Norton Sound, more information is needed to really find out what species are either here, or making their way up north.

Climate change experts speak of the northward distribution of species but those assertions don't register until a local fisherman does find something unusual in his net. That's what happened last week. Along with the regular red king crabs, fisherman Tony Shelp had a crab in his pot that has not yet been found in Norton

NSEDC fishery biologist Charlie Lean identified the unusual looking king crab as a Paralithodes brevipes, also known as Hanasaki crab. The crab is considered a luxury food item in Japan and is mostly found in more southern areas on the Asian side of the Bering Sea and North Pacific. Lean said the find is quite stunning because it means that the crab has made its way across the ocean's deep trenches from Asia. He said the only place for the shallowwater-loving crab species to cross the Bering Sea would be closer to the Bering Strait or the shallows around St. Lawrence Island.

Lean said that there is anecdotal information that Hanasaki crabs have been caught at St. Lawrence Island and Little Diomede. "It's a big deal insofar as that this species now has moved onto the north American shore," Lean said.

While they are not appearing in such numbers as to be commercially fishable, Lean said that the little fellow sitting in the NSSP fish tank along with all the red king crabs, is interesting because it does prove that the species is rapidly moving north and east, presumably due to warmer waters associated with climate

The crab was identified as a male. While it's fate is yet undetermined, a taxidermist in Anchorage offered NSSP $200 to purchase and mount the specimen.

Familiar faces gathered around the barbeque, including former volunteers and news directors Paul Korchin and Michael Jones. Station Manager Ric Schmidt said while it feels great to celebrate this 40th birthday of KNOM, it also is time to reflect on people like Augie Hiebert, Tom Busch and Senator Ted Stevens who have helped to shape KNOM into a functioning, connecting radio station to serve western Alaska. "We are standing on the shoulders of those folks who have gone before us," Schmidt said. Under the motto

"We're just getting started" the radio station is in a time of transition. KNOM started out -and still is - a Catholic radio mission with the license still owned by the Catholic Bishop of Fairbanks. It is the oldest Catholic radio station in the US.

Former news director Paul Korchin now lives in Fairbanks and works as a professor at the religion department of the University of Fairbanks. Korchin was in Nome from 1988 until 2009, first as a volunteer and then full time staff at KNOM. ### Senate District T Alaska Coastal Management Program sunsets

The second special session, which recently convened to extend the Alaska Coastal Management Program (ACMP) failed to produce any results. I regret to inform my constituents that our attempt to save the program is over, for now. As a strong proponent of reforming and extending ACMP, I am very frustrated with this outcome. I have been trying to reform ACMP since former Governor Frank Murkowski gutted the program in 2003.

Since we left Juneau, there has been talk among my colleagues in the legislature of a new effort to reestablish the program next session. I will welcome this new effort and engage in this debate. I have no intent, however, of reinstating a program that is a major source of frustration for the coastal districts. It is my plan to enter this discussion and work side-by-side with my colleagues to help create a new program from scratch that will represent rural Alaska's concerns. Accordingly, my office is currently reviewing certain federal laws:

- 1. OPA 90 (Oil Pollution Act of 1990)
- 2. Deep Water Port Act
- 3. Clean Water Act
- 4. Comprehensive Environmental Responses, Compensation, and Liability Act
  - (a.k.a. SUPERFUND)
- 5. Coastal Zone Management Act
- 6. Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act

I've also directed my staff to look at current Alaska laws pertaining to:

Water, water

"Water, Water, everywhere, Nor any drop to drink. — The Ancient Mariner Samuel T. Coleridge 1772-1834

Water, water everywhere and that should make us think. As we hear of devastating fires and record-breaking drought we sit here in Nome and listen to the steady drumming of rain on our metal roofs. We open our water taps and pure fresh water fills our glass. Oh, we complain because we've had a long stretch of rainy, miserable, cold weather, but we should remember that pure water is one of the world's most sought after commodities.

Nome is so lucky to have a plentiful supply of clean artesian well water from Moonlight Springs. We have a precious gift that has a growing market potential. Just imagine the revenue the City could take in. We need some nice re-cycled plastic bottles with the image of Anvil Mountain or a gold pan, dog team or a moonbeam. We can promote our water as having filtered through the Mother Lode and put a few flecks of gold in each quart. (Well, maybe we could keep the gold.) We are so fortunate to have such a fine source of water. Of course, we must do all we can to keep it clean. The Moonlight Springs watershed is a gift worth protecting. If we ever lose it, it can't be replaced.

We should not get careless about clean water. Our state and federal governments are getting too intense about pulling the teeth from laws that protect our water. They are anxious to make money at the expense of clean water. We must remember that we are the custodians of our environment. Our water is precious because it is so pure. Let's keep it that way. — N.L.M.—

We are also looking at other states 'coastal management programs and what they do – particularly those states along the Gulf of Mexico. I'd also like to mention that I welcome any of your thoughts or ideas pertaining to a new coastal management program bill next session.

I'd like to close by informing my constituents, my colleagues, the Governor, and the oil & gas industry that I am a strong supporter of development in our state, so long as that development is both culturally and environmentally responsible. That will be the principle that guides me as we enter this debate and discuss the future of Alaska.

$ Capital funding projects $

The capital budget for fiscal year 2012 was signed by Governor Parnell a couple of weeks ago. As you know, the capital budget funds infrastructure projects statewide and greatly impacts Alaska's rural economies. The Governor did veto some good projects for both Districts 39 and 40, but Representatives Neal Foster and Reggie Joule and I will work with the leaders of those communities to reevaluate and resubmit those projects for next year's budget. Despite the vetoes I am pleased with the funding allocated to our villages. I appreciate the collaborative efforts of the councils, school boards, and communities working to secure these critical funds. For District 39, the total amount of projects funded is $67,131,783 and for District 40, the total amount of projects funded is $75,478,679. Our districts will see funding for school renovations, wind energy feasibility studies, generator replacements, health care facilities, airport & road projects, as well as for many heavy equipment needs.

Fairbanks North Star Borough challenges redistricting map

The Fairbanks North Star Borough and assemblyman Tim Beck last week filed a lawsuit in the District Court in Fairbanks challenging the redistricting plan that the Alaska redistricting board came up with. The main complaint of the lawsuit is that districts are not compact and contiguious as spelled out in state requirements. Communities near Fairbanks, such as the Goldstream Valley and the city of Ester, would be absorbed by a huge district that stretches all the way to the Y-K Delta and the Bering Sea.

House of Representatives votes to relax Clean Water Act

Last week, the U.S. House approved the "Clean Water Cooperative Federalism Act of 2011" that undermines the Environmental Protection Agency's ability to protect water quality standards nationwide. The law removes the EPA's authority to take action when state water quality standards are not protective of public health. In addition, it would restrict EPA's authority to take action when it finds that a state's CWA permit or permit program are inadequate and would shorten EPA's review and collaboration with the Army Corps of Engineers on permits for dredged or fill material. The law was written in response to EPA actions on mountaintop removal coal mining and nutrient pollution problems. Rep. Don Young voted for the bill, and added amendments in response to "Conoco Phillips CD-5 issue on the North Slope, the Kensington Mine outside Juneau, and other such issues where the EPA has gotten in the way of projects that are clearly environmentally sound," his office said. The bill is heading now to the Senate. The White House already signaled that if it goes through the Senate, the President's senior advisors would recommend to veto the bill.

Rock Creek still for sale

In its second quarter financial statement, NovaGold Resources Inc. reaffirmed to bring their "core" mine projects Galore Creek and Donlin Creek online. The joint venture between NovaGold and Barrick so far known as Donlin Creek LLC changed names to Donlin Gold LLC. NovaGold also owns the Ambler project and has budgeted $10 million for exploration and geotechnical drilling in 2011 and for additional studies to determine the environmental and engineering aspects of developing the deposit. No new developments were announced regarding the idle Rock Creek mine. NovaGold budgeted $8.5 million for Rock Creek to meet permit requirements and environmental obligations. NovaGold still wants to sell Rock Creek, but is working an updated closure plan in the event that the company's board of directors chooses to close and reclaim the property and has budgeted a supplemental US$6.8 million for preparing the updated closure plan.

Governor Parnell signs Susitna hydro bill

Last week, Governor Sean Parnell signed a bill that paves the way to build the $5 billion Susitna hydro project The bill allows the Alaska Energy Authority to advance the engineering and design of damming the Susitna River south of Cantwell to deliver, proponents hope, 50 percent of energy needed to power southcentral Alaska.

Agreement moves walrus toward Endangered Species Act protection

The Fish and Wildlife Service and the Center for Biological Diversity signed an agreement in which the USFWS commits to make initial or final decisions on whether to add hundreds of imperiled plants and animals to the endangered species list by 2018. The agreement includes the Pacific walrus. Kittlitz's murrelet and vellowbilled loon in Alaska. The agreement spells out binding deadlines for the Fish and Wildlife Service to decide on protections for 757 species around the country between now and 2017. The agreement was submitted to U.S. District Judge Emmet Sullivan in Washington, D.C., for approval.

First two Alaskan women nominated to the federal bench

In a historic Senate Judiciary Committee confirmation hearing, Senators Lisa Murkowski and Mark Begich today introduced and spoke to the qualifications of two Alaskan judicial nominees; Justice Morgan Christen, nominee to the 9th Circuit, U.S. Court of Appeals and Judge Sharon Gleason, nominee to U.S. District Court for the District of Alaska. Justice Morgan Christen has clerked in the Alaska Superior Court, practiced law in the private sector, and was appointed to the Alaska Superior Court in 2001. In 2009, she was appointed to the Alaska Supreme Court, where she currently sits. Judge Sharon Gleason began her legal career as a clerk in the Alaska Supreme Court, followed by a legal career in the private sector. She was appointed to the Alaska Superior court in 2001, and was elevated to the role of Presiding Judge of the Third Judicial District in 2009. The nominations of Justice Christen and Judge Gleason must still be voted on by the Judiciary Committee, and confirmed before the full Senate body.

Two plead guilty in illegal walrus ivory trade

Two men from southcentral Alaska pleaded guilty to charges of illegally trading walrus ivory and polar bear hides. Jesse James LeBoeuf of Glennallen and Richard Weshenfelder of Anchorage entered a guilty plea in federal court last week. A third, Loretta Sternbach, was to plead after press deadline on Tuesday. They are accused of trading walrus tusks and two polar bear hides in violation of the federal marine mammal laws for cigarettes, guns and snowmachines from hunters in Savoonga.

Sen. Wielechowski and Rep. Seaton named Legislators of the Year for 2011

The Alaska Conservation Voters recognized Sen. Bill Wielechowski, D-Anchorage, and Rep. Paul Seaton, R-Homer, as legislators who advocate for responsible pro-conservation legislation that allows Alaska to prosper economically while maintaining a healthy environment. They argued that Sen. Wielechowski is a leader on clean energy issues and was instrumental in securing funding for energy efficiency projects for businesses, churches and

ON A MISSION— KNOM's general manager Ric Schmidt at the entrance of KNOM announced the dedication of the facility to Augie Hiebert. A. G. "Augie" Hiebert was a pioneer Alaskan broadcaster whose work and connections in the broadcast industry were vital in the establishment of KNOM.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY — KNOM's Tim Schmidt and volunteers George Cebula, middle, and Terry Hiebert-Puhr, right, were in charge of handing out 780 hot dogs during an open house lunch barbeque in celebration of KNOM's 40th birthday. Why 780? Because 780 AM was the first frequency assigned to KNOM in 1971.

and information. "There is a sense of continuity and community in western Alaska that makes folks feel they are connected and through the radio they feel their voices are heard," said Korchin. "I think that KNOM always made an effort to educate and inform and connect, not as a voice from afar but as a member of the larger western Alaska community."

Another visitor from the past was Korchin's predecessor Michael Jones. He said that he learned a great deal from his three years spent in Nome and with KNOM as it led to work at the Alaska Public Radio network and now as a teacher at Lake Otis Elementary School in Anchorage. "My time here gave me a good understanding of rural issues and it helps me a great deal to understand kids that come from rural Alaska," Jones said.

Festivities included a barbeque, an open house and a studio dedication to Augie Hiebert and a Mass in celebration of KNOM's birthday and Father Ross Tozzi's 10-year jubilee as a priest.

structor, the military requires an associates' degree, and to be the senior instructor, the military requires a bachelor's degree. Also, the instructor is required to complete the mandatory "JROTC Distant Learning Course" and attend the "JROTC School of Cadet Command Instructor Training Course" at Fort Monroe, Virginia.

Brawner commented that JROTC contracts are unusual, because instructors not only need to satisfy NPS rules but also meet the military's qualifications. He said the current JROTC instructors are very much appreciated by NPS and that the school is glad to have them, but at the same time they need to satisfy the military's requirements.

The board voted to add an amendment to Knowlton's contract that says that the contract is under consideration while the school's administration is researching the particulars of what is needed for resolution to comply with the military certification process. Also, the addendum stipulates that Knowlton has to fulfill the obligation to meet the military standards.

During board discussion, board member Nickels brought up the activities director's contract that is in limbo, as the board took no action to renew the $8,000-per-year contract during a special meeting on June 28. The contract expired June 30, but the new contract date doesn't start until August 1. During the special meeting last month, the board did not have the contract and negotiated agreement language in front of them as part of the board packet. Tozier and Amarok requested more information on the AD contract at that time. A day before the board's regular meeting, they received that information but still had questions. Nickels asked what exactly those questions were, but neither Amarok nor Tozier expressed concrete concerns or questions during the meeting

Board President Karmun said that according to the Robert's Rules of Order, the naysayers, in this case Tozier and Amarok, have to be fully satisfied with their review or request for more information and then bring the topic back on the agenda. There was no indication when this would occur.

To prevent future hold-ups, Karmun requested that board packets include copies of relevant board policies or contracts, negotiated agreements or relevant paperwork to give the board the necessary information to make decisions.

Pat Callahan attended the meeting to stay informed on the process. He said in an interview after the meeting that although the contract covers August through June, there are tasks that need to be done in July such as making travel arrangements for the upcoming cross-country running and volleyball season.

Usually, Callahan explained to The Nome Nugget, he would be making plane seat reservations right now and communicating with the coaches about their planned travels for the upcoming sports season. Consequently, with no reservations made ahead of time, it may cost the kids more money to get to travel and get to competitions.

Callahan said that the extra-duty job as the AD is a huge time commitment that entails year-round involvement, weekends spent taking kids to airports or making arrangements for students who are stuck in Nome after competitions.

Callahan has been the athletic director for the past seven years and also serves as the boy's basketball coach. He said that last year, his contract wasn't renewed until June, but in prior years, the contract had been renewed in May, which gave him time to work on planning in the summer

Callahan said he enjoyed working as the AD, and somebody had to do it, but he doesn't take offense to the board's inaction to renew his contract. He said that the school's principal and other supervisors were satisfied with his work and evaluated him positively.

Callahan added that he also feels good about his track record of hosting large tournaments and finding numerous opportunities for free or reduced travel for Junior High teams. "Most of the free or reduced rate travel and excellent junior high, JV and varsity level activity schedules are due to my years of building positive relationships with other athletic directors from around Alaska," Callahan explained.

Callahan is also on the three-person Region I Executive Committee, which has the final say in all disputes at all Region I sanctioned events. Callahan's seat on the committee would be lost if he does not return as the school's activities director. Because no AD contract is in place, Callahan said, he can only assume that he will not be the 2010-11 Nome-Beltz AD.

In other business, the board voted unanimously to rent out three dorm rental units to newly arriving teachers to ease their transition into the community. The rentals go for $700 a month, which would roughly take care of renovation costs for the first year and then could become a profit to the school district the following years, Brawner said. Karmun said that she would hate to see that NPS is competing with the rental market in Nome and take away business. Brawner said the rentals don't compete with the local real estate market and should only be seen as transition housing for new hired teachers who had considerable expenses in moving to Nome.

Twelve NPS employees—including four new teacher hires—were slated to attend the culture camp on August 2-5. Two canceled but Gartung said he may find two other individuals to fill in.

Superintendent Mike Brawner also informed the board that the school district is about to receive a grant from the State to finance a pilot pre-kindergarten program for 2012 in the amount of $219,539.

For the lack of topics, a scheduled work session for July 26 was canceled, but a special meeting may be called in if board members Amarok and Tozier want to discuss the AD's contract.

Knowlton's JROTC contract will be brought back to be discussed in the next regular meeting on August

Pandalus

King crab trawl

The crew of the R/V Pandalus went through the last preparations on the weekend to get ready for departure on Monday for its first leg of surveys being done in Norton Sound. Alaska Department of Fish and Game Project Manager Joyce Soong along with assistant crew leader Larry Neff and another biologist joined Captain Mark Hottmann, engineer Robert Hancock and a cook on Monday as the Pandalus set out for a 10 to 12 day trawl survey.

Captain Mark Hottmann said that the mission is actually a multispecies trawl for shellfish and ground fish. According to the ADF&G plan, the goals are to survey a portion of Norton Sound for red king crabs and associated marine life for "spatial distribution, abundance and population characteristics.'

The data from the trawl will feed a database that has been created by the National Marine Fisheries Service and ADF&G and has consistently been updated with trawl results from 1976 through 2006. Weather pending, the trawler is trying to hit the same 38 stations, using the same tenby-ten-miles grid patterns and following the same general sampling

They use a benthic net that is dragged over the ocean floor. The scientists on board then sort through the catch, measure and weigh the crabs, examine the crab's shells and test a few crabs for microsporidians, or a sickness called cottage cheese disease. The tissues of these infected crabs then would be sent to a NMFS shellfish pathologist in Seattle. If they catch halibut or large cod, they measure the fish and then release them immediately. The biologists sub-sample one to three baskets of their total catch.

The R/V Pandalus is owned by the State of Alaska, Department of Fish and Game. The vessel, built in 1972, was among the one third of the state's research boats that then-Governor Frank Murkowski put up for sale and Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. stepped in to buy the boat so that further trawl surveys could be done. The State, under Murkowski's successor Sarah Palin, bought the vessel back from

The last ADF&G trawl survey was done in 2008. Then, the harvestable male crab population was estimated at approximately 812,000 crabs, or about 2.44 million pounds. Jim Menard, ADF&G area manager for Norton Sound and Kotzebue, said that the triennial trawl survey gives the department an estimate of the crab population and what is going into the legally harvestable crab population the next year.

The trawl survey, combined with the annual winter pot survey, helps ADF&G set the crab harvest quota, which cannot exceed 10 percent of the harvestable population.

To get a more complete picture of the state of the shell and ground fish population in Norton Sound and further north, NSEDC booked the Pandalus for another 12 days. After ADF&G is done with their survey, NSEDC steps in and helps to complete the survey by hitting stations that ADF&G didn't get to do due to

Charlie Lean said that NSEDC's interests are particularly the crab population numbers of east Norton Sound. "We are of the opinion, that in recent years the set of abundance has shifted to the east," Lean said. He said that big changes in population numbers are occurring from Elim to Shaktoolik and Unalakleet.

Once the Pandalus has covered all the crab stations, it will study the area between Wales, Teller and Brevig Mission for bottom fish, blue king crab, cod and halibut. Captain Hottmann gave credit to the local Fish and Game biologists and especially NSEDC to continue the effort of obtaining data and to organize these trawls.

With a humble grin, he said, "I'm just the boat driver, but they make it happen." After the NSEDC mission, the Pandalus will head north to the Chukchi Sea to do a multi-agency survey, using pelagic and benthic nets. The results of the ADF&G survey will be out in a draft report summary by September 30.

salmon catch through July 14 totaled 90 kings, 151 sockeyes, 71,953 chums, 1,008 pinks and 30 silvers. The chum catch is expected to fall behind last year's catch unless a late season surge occurs.

The commercial chum salmon catch in the Elim subdistrict (22,192 chums) and Golovin subdistrict (20,187 chums) are the best since the 1980s. The Golovin subdistrict will likely remain closed until silver salmon season because the mid-July escapement projection shows chum salmon escapement will just be reached in the Fish River drainage.

The king salmon management plan for the Unalakleet and Shaktoolik subdistricts does not allow chum fishing until July if the king run is poor, and fishing has been limited this month due to weather conditions. The commercial harvest in the Unalakleet subdistrict totals 56 kings, 73 sockeyes, 15,825 chums, 979 pinks and 25 silvers. Commercial fishermen in the Shaktoolik subdistrict caught 27 kings, 71 sockeyes, 13,749 chums, 29 pinks and 5 sil-

Crab fishermen were able to get out late last week, and some permit holders brought in big loads of red king crab on July 15. One fisherman caught a 9-pound crab. #### Unalakleet and Shaktoolik subdistricts

Sport fishing for king salmon is closed until August 15 in the Unalakleet and Shaktoolik subdistricts. The closure includes catch and release fishing for king salmon. In addition, the use of bait is banned in the Unalakleet River drainage and in the Shaktoolik River drainage.

Subsistence salmon gillnet fishing is open seven days a week. Beach seining is allowed seven days a week, but any king salmon captured must be immediately released in the The commercial fishing schedule now in effect in both subdistricts is two 48-hour fishing periods a week from 6 p.m. Sundays to 6 p.m. Tuesdays and from 6 p.m. Wednesdays until 6 p.m. Fridays. Nets are restricted to 100 fathoms or less and gillnet mesh size is restricted to 6 inches or less stretched mesh.

Following are salmon tallies through mid-July for counting projects on the Unalakleet River and its tributary, the North River.

Unalakleet River test net-Catches through July 15 totaled 132 kings, 1,749 chums, 32 pinks, 1 sockeye and 1 silver. Subsistence fishing time has been reduced since 2007, so catch comparisons with previous years can be somewhat skewed.

The king catch is one and one-half times the five-year average for July 15. The chum catch is a record for this date because no commercial fishing was allowed until July to protect king salmon, and adverse weather has limited fishing this month. The pink catch ranks third lowest through July 14 when com-

We've Only Just Begun

Last Thursday KNOM celebrated its 40th anniversary with the theme "We've only just begun." The first song played on that first day 40 years ago was the Carpenter's hit, We've only just begun. The lyrics to the song include the following lines:

And when the evening comes, we smile So much of life ahead We'll find a place where there's room to grow And yes, we've just begun

With 40 years behind it, I pray that there is much life ahead and room to grow for the station. KNOM has always sought to entertain, to engage, to inspire, and to inform the listeners of Western Alaska: from the Yukon Delta to the Bering Strait and throughout the villages and rural stretches of the Alaskan Bush. And in the years ahead, KNOM plans to continue that same mission which has always given voice to the needs and concerns of those who live in Western Alaska.

KNOM is a Catholic radio station – the oldest in the United States – and both the heritage and future of the station are rooted in the Roman Catholic faith. Among the first words aired over the station were a prayer by Bishop Robert Whelan, S.J. "Almighty God, who has commanded that the Word go forth to all people, grant that this radio station made possible through the love, devotion and generosity of so many people may always be an instrument of good news in spreading the joy and peace of Christ our Lord to all men whatever their creed or race. May almighty God bless you in the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit. Amen." The prayerful devotion and generosity of many individuals over 40 years has sustained KNOM in its mission and allowed for growth and evolution.

In its continued efforts to grow and to stand on its own two feet, KNOM is in the process of reorganization. This causes a little confusion and people often ask me, "Is the station breaking away from the church?" No, it is not. The Alaska Radio Mission which has operated under the guidance of the Catholic Bishop of Northern Alaska is in the process of becoming KNOM Radio Mission, Inc. with local ownership of the license to broadcast. One of the principles of Catholic social teaching is known as the principle of subsidiarity. This teaching holds that nothing should be done by a larger and more complex organization which can be done as well by a smaller and simpler organization. In other words, KNOM will be guided and accountable to an independent board, a smaller and simpler structure than the diocesan structure of the Catholic Bishop of Northern Alaska. I am humbled to serve on that board along with others within the community and within the state who bring special knowledge and gifts for KNOM to grow.

One of the reasons KNOM has been so successful over the past 40 years is because of its respect for the varied cultures of Western Alaska and its willingness to deal honestly and truthfully with the joys, the struggles and the issues that people encounter in their daily life. My prayer for KNOM is that the rich heritage of the past will continue for many more years to come. Or in the lyrics of the Carpenter's:

Sharing horizons that are new to us Watching the signs along the way Talkin' it over, just the two of us, [DJ and listener] Workin' together day to day, together, together. raising of her siblings due to the early death of their parents. She is believed to be the last known person to have been born on Sledge Island, and always expressed a desire to return there for a visit. Lena grew up at Sinuk and attended school in Nome. Celebrity status reached out to Nome for Santa's Helpers in Newark, New Jersey for young Lena and family in 1927. Santa brought the whole family back east to assist him and his reindeer during the Christmas season.

During World War II, Lena

During World War II, Lena worked at the army base in Nome, where she met Bill Hoogendorn, a young miner from the Deering area who had been drafted into the army. They were married in 1947. They remained in Nome where they raised their seven children. In addition to being a homemaker, Lena worked for the Nome Receiving Home and the Bering Sea Women's Shelter.

Earlier in her life, Lena enjoyed the outdoors, camping with the family to pick berries. Fishing and putting away many salmon with Elsie Ball and Blanche Walters was always on the agenda. Evenings found her crocheting at the Methodist women's group or visiting with friends to play scrabble for hours.

Lena had a special place in her heart for her grandchildren and great-grandchildren, who all have loving memories of their "Nanny." Diagnosed with Alzheimer's disease in the late 1990s, she resided at Compassionate Care, an assisted living home in Anchorage where she received the most caring, kind and gentle care from Brenda Humble and her staff during her last years.

Lena is survived by her husband, William Hoogendorn, Sr. of Nome; son Homer (Peggy), daughter Betty Ann; son Randy (Geri); sister Ruth Julia Foster of Tacoma; 13 grandchildren, 42 great-grandchildren and one great-great granddaughter, as well as countless nieces and nephews and a multitude of friends who loved her dearly. She was preceded in death by her father Harold, mother Ruth, son William Jr., daughters Janet (Dolly), Nancy (Teener) and Ruth Louise (Babe), sisters Betty Ogden and Elissa Nelson, brothers Joe Brown and Harry Iutok, great-granddaughter Alanna Alowa, and great-grandson Alfred Hoogendorn.

For those who helped in bringing Shirley to her final resting place, thank you again Lincoln Trigg and Jon Trigg. For those who helped in burying her, and there were many who helped: Jon's Family, Eric Trigg, Maria Trigg and sons, Barbara Aukon's family and Charlie Brown's family. And Pastor Karen Sonray, who stayed and shared from beginning to end and for her kind and beautiful words and prayers given Shirley. And a huge thank you for all who prepared food and shared it at Shirley's cabin near Solomon. Again, thank you one and all for helping me say good bye to my sister, Shirley.

How chicken soup helps fight the common cold

Alaska Family Doctor

There has been an increase in cases of acute nasopharyngitis (common cold) associated with the wet and rainy weather this month. While

Americans will spend nearly $3 billion this year on over-thecounter medications treat the symptoms of the common cold, I wanted to remind you of a less expensive option: chicken soup. Chicken soup may be the single most effective home remedy for common upper respiratory infections in adults and children. The positive effects of chicken soup have stood the test of time. Doctors in ancient Babylonia, Egypt, and Greece all mention the use of chicken soup in their writings. But how does chicken soup work? Modern science provides some answers.

First, soup is hydrating. Viral infections, especially if accompanied by fever, cause an increase in the body's loss of fluids leading to dehydration. These fluids need to be replaced. Most chicken soups provide the fluid and electrolyte replacement necessary for rehydration. I recommend homemade and lowsalt varieties for overall health bene-

Second, chicken soup helps open mented in 1978 by Saketkhoo and his colleagues, who demonstrated that warm chicken soup had a greater effect on nasal mucus velocity than plain hot water or cold water. The positive effects were short lived, less than 30 minutes in this study, but helped explain why most people experience a temporary relief of nasal congestion after eating

Third, chicken soup contains a compound similar to a medication called acetylcysteine—a substance that helps break up mucus so it can flow more easily out of the airways or nasal passages. This mucus-thinning effect is increased when spices like garlic, peppers, and onions are added to the soup.

Fourth, chicken soup acts as an anti-inflammatory. Most of what makes a person feel bad during a cold or flu is not the infection, but the body's inflammatory reaction to Neutrophils—the the infection. white blood cells that fight off infection-are released in greater numbers as part of an inflammatory reaction during a cold or flu. In 2000, Dr. Stephen Rennard, a pulmonologist at the University of Nebraska Medical Center, published research in the journal Chest showsoup slowed the movement of these neutrophils-effectively acting like an anti-inflammatory medication. Dr. Rennard and his team went on to soups showed similar positive effects.

Finally, and perhaps most importantly, chicken soup made with vegtein, fat, and carbohydrates, all the nutrients the body needs to restore health after a serious infection.

Scientists found that the Bering Sea southern Tanner crab plunged in numbers due to environmental factors and habitat degradation.

Under the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act, NOAA and the eight regional fishery management councils are required to end overfishing, use annual catch limits and accountability measures to prevent future overfishing, and rebuild stocks to levels that can provide the maximum sustainable yield. If not overfished, U.S fisheries are expected to add $31 billion to the economy and an additional 500,000 jobs. Commercial and recreational fishing currently generate $72 billion per year and support 1.9 million full and part-time jobs.

Manilaaq lays off employees

Alaska Public Radio reported that Manilaaq Association is cutting staff due to federal funding uncertainties. Manilaaq president Ian Erlich announced the cuts on KOTZ radio saying that Maniilaq was forced to make cuts when faced with a $12 million budget shortfall and no federal funding coming in to pay for programs that don't produce any income. There was no indication of how many employees would be laid off.

John Baker to address AFN Convention

2011 Iditarod champion John Quniag Baker is slated to deliver the 2011 AFN Convention keynote address. Baker has spent the past twelve years visiting schools in rural Alaska where he speaks about establishing a dream, and pursuing it. His focus is "dream, try, win". Baker entered his first Iditarod Sled Dog Race in 1996. He has completed sixteen Iditarod races with twelve finishes in the top ten and two in third place. This year he became the first Alaska Native musher to win the Iditarod. This year's AFN convention will take place at the Dena'ina Center in Anchorage from October 20 to 22. This year's motto is "Strength in Unity."

HUD awards $2.4 million to AHFC

U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development awarded more than $2,4 million to the Alaska Housing Finance Corporation to help it make major improvements to their public housing inventory. HUD's capital fund program provides annual funding to all public housing authorities to build, repair, renovate and modernize the public housing in their communities. This funding can be used to make improvements such as new roofs and to make energy-efficient upgrades to replace old plumbing and electrical systems.

acting president and chief executive officer for NSHC. The appointment is effective July 30. Current leader Carol Piscova tendered her resignation earlier this month.

Agloinga, of White Mountain, is NSHC's Chief Operating Officer and has been on the board of directors from 2003 until 2005. While a hiring committee made up of board members is looking nationwide for a permanent president and CEO to guide the region's health corporation, Roy Agloinga is at the helm to steer the ship in times of great transition.

Agloinga is deeply rooted in the region and in the field of health care. "I was born in this very hospital," he said, during an interview with The Nome Nugget last Friday.

Born in Nome and raised in White Mountain, Agloinga is the son of the late Martha and Steven Agloinga. His grandmother was a midwife, his mother one of the first village health aides, his sister and three of his nieces are working in the field of healthcare and his cousin is the tribal healer at NSHC. "Things that we talked about in my family and things that we were involved in were always about health and wellness and healing," remembered Agloinga, "I feel like my family has been a part of Norton Sound and a part of health care traditionally."

Council sets junker list

By Sandra Medearis

The Nome Common Council and City administration has lifted the ax-again-aiming to strike down the shacks in town that they think pose a risk of fire hazard, health hazard or public nuisance, according to City law.

Emergency responders, fire and ambulance, along with Chief of Police John Papasadora and the building inspector, Allen Maxwell, have put 11 places on a list for an abatement hearing. The abatement process begins with the list, an official notice to the owner, followed by a public hearing to discuss the hazard report and to give the owner or representative a chance to be heard. A mulling over the report to determine whether it is true may be followed by a Council site visit, followed by a resolution declaring the building a hazard or nuisance. Then the owner or an agent would receive a removal or demolition order giving a deadline of 14 days or longer. During this time the owner may request an additional hearing to show that deficiencies have been removed or remedy is in progress.

Papasadora delivered the list to the Council at a work session July19. They received an album of structures, long on weeds and junk, lots of boards and windows short of that Better-Homes-and-Gardens look.

During the work session, former building inspector Pat Hahn, considering the list, told the Council the ordinance needed a tweak, that "ugly was not a reason for abatement.

"Half the buildings don't meet the criteria. We need additional criteria. Just because a building is ugly, it doesn't need to be on the list," Hahn

The list included the dilapidated-called ugly by many-Wien Building on Front Street, star of the list for many years and weeks run-

During public comment, Hahn 'fessed up to owning the structure, but not the land it sits on. That land has three owners, with whom Hahn has not been able to come to a purchase agreement, he said. However, Hahn told the Council he had a potential buyer for the building in the wings. That buyer intended to move the building.

"If they are going to buy it, I don't want it on the abatement list," Hahn said. "If they aren't going to buy it, then I do want it on the abatement

The building remains on the list, was the Council sentiment, because Hahn or new owners must deal with the building's derelict condition.

"Leave it on the list," Councilwoman Mary Knodel said. "Maybe it will get the new owners motivated.

The building is in poor condition, and has asbestos issues. "It is encapsulated asbestos siding. It can be double bagged and removed," Hahn said.

These are the properties on the list, with notes provided by Pa-

Letters -

Dear Editor:

A happy July day to you, your staff, family and friends!

People had flocked to America to escape their ruling, controlling elite class, their kings, queens, emperors, tsar, etc. The ruling classes are very cunning. Look at America (United States), the system. Does it remind you of yesteryears' ruling class? The original reason the people left their countries to come to America was to be free to create values for themselves and others, AKA opportunities. Now, we cannot do things without fear of breaking some law.

The elite are getting into our Native Corporations. How do I know, you ask? The corporation board members are starting to go to meetings outside of the village. The board is now not hearing the shareholders. They are doing what they are told to do. They are being educated as to how to think, to just shut up and do as told.

I know this because our local tribal governmental organization has been going to out-of-town meetings on an annual basis. At the last community meeting about the electric intertie project between our village and a neighboring village, I overheard a local tribal council member, who has been in the council maybe 20-plusyears, say, "Just let them do what they want to do. Let them see that it won't work that way."

That councilmember is not getting my vote and neither are the career politicians. I will be voting for the market-driven business people who want nothing but values for the people. Not more rules or laws designed for the elite and to slow you down. Rock-in' the BOAT,

Warren S. Rock Brevig Mission, AK 99785

In your July 22nd edition there was a brief note (on page 16) about John Baker's win in the Iditarod, including that he was the first Alaska Native to win it. In 1974, Carl Huntington of Galena won the second Iditarod Race, and I'm sure his family would like to let everyone know that he, as an Alaska Native was proud to race, represent, and win.

The Pledge

Where are the grownups? Why is this nation riding on the brink of economic disaster? Our ultra-conservative Tea Party Republican Congressmen have taken a pledge. No, not a pledge to swear off booze and hard liquor; certainly not the Pledge of Allegiance. They were rounded up like a herd of cattle and made to take a pledge to cut taxes. They have put this pledge ahead of the oath they took when they were admitted to Congress. No private pledge should take precedence over the oath of office to the U.S. Congress.

The Tea Party's no tax pledge stinks like treason. Members of Congress owe their allegiance to the nation and its citizens. They should not bind their votes in a secret pledge to keep the lobbyists and billionaires happy. They have sold their souls to their re-election campaign contributors. They sold their votes to big money and are acting like bullies. We should hope that they are not totally brain dead, but they seem to be willing to let the debt ceiling fall on their heads. They have as much understanding of economics and the widespread impact of their deeds as a spider monkey.

The Congressional irresponsibility brings their patriotism into question. Thinking folks want to just wrap the whole bunch of them in duct tape and keel haul them in the Potomac. Wiser heads need to prevail and let the children know that the Tea Party is over. —N. L. M. —

Dear Editor.

I just got released from Seaside and I didn't like doing my jail time at Seaside because we (residents) are being punished for two (2) female residents that got pregnant at Seaside Center that are no longer here! They got sent back to AMCC and we are paying for their mistake for not practicing safe sex! By being on lock down nine (9) times a day before and after every meal and three more times before we go to bed.

At the same time we are being verbally threatened, cursed at, and lied to by staff. It should be the staff's mistake for not monitoring the cameras. The residents have absolutely no freedom here at Seaside and are locked down all day with only three to four hours of phone time to call a lawyer or public defender. Between 40 male residents are fighting to use three phones and half of them are not able to use the phones with what little free time we have.

A staff member verbally threatened a resident after he asked why the resident is taking his medication for his back by saying "Now I know your weakness, if you get on my nerves, I'll just go for your back and you'll go down." Another resident

News from around the state

Compiled by Diana Haecker

EPA seeks public comments on new air quality permits for Shell and ConocoPhillips OCS drilling

Last Friday, the EPA released two draft air quality permits for Shell Oil and ConocoPhillips exploratory oil drilling operations in the Alaska Arctic Outer Continental Shelf. The EPA now seeks input on air permits needed for the drill rigs and supporting fleets of icebreakers, oil spill response vessels and supply ships operations in the Chukchi and Beaufort Seas beginning in the 2012 and 2013 drilling seasons. Shell and ConocoPhillips have proposed exploration drilling operations that would emit more than 100 tons of air pollutants a year. This requires federal Clean Air Act permits to limit air pollution from the drill rigs and supporting fleet of ships.

Shell plans to begin exploration drilling with the vessel Kulluk in the Beaufort Sea beginning in the 2012 drilling season. ConocoPhillips plans to begin exploration drilling in the Chukchi Sea beginning in 2013. EPA takes public comments on the revised draft permits through September 6 and at public hearings in Barrow on August 23 and 24, and in Anchorage on August 26. Final permits will be issued after public comments are reviewed and considered.

AEA assembles Susitna hydro team

The state is recruiting its Susitna-Watana hydro project team with the goal to start up the $5 billion hydropower system on the Susitna River by 2023. The plan is to dam the glacially fed Susitna River in order to power the railbelt region of Alaska with "cheap" electricity. Licensing the project is expected to take six years and construction will take five years.

The Susitna-Watana project requires building a 700-foot-high dam on the river at the Watana site. The dam would create a 39-mile-long reservoir with a maximum width of two miles. The project is to have an installed capacity of 600 Megawatts, and planners scheme to supply half of the railbelt's current energy needs at a stable or declining rate for the project life of more than 100 years. The Alaska Energy Authority is preparing to file the preliminary FERC application.

Kusko 300 in crisis

If you are flexible, persistent, patient, willing to work hard and able to innovate in the face of particular issues presented by living and working in Bush Alaska, then, congratulations, you may be suitable to become race manager for the Kuskokwim 300 sled dog race. The premier sled dog race held for the past 32 years in Bethel may not take place in 2012 for the lack of a race manager, the K-300 race committee said last week. Their former race manager took a different job. Committee chair Myron Angstman said that although there is no race manager on duty at the moment, the committee has a number of new candidates to consider. He said that if they don't find a suitable manager, there would be no K-300. The sled dog race is one of the most grueling and respected mid-distance sled dog races in the world.

Parnell signs package of Labor and Commerce bills

House Bill 188 allows an individual offering a loan of $25,000 or less, to charge an interest rate that would be the greater of 10 percent or 5 percent above the 12th Federal Reserve District rate at the time of the loan. Today that would allow a maximum rate of 10 percent. House Bill 87 updates the criminal penalties for the state's antitrust laws and adds a civil penalty provision. Under current law, an antitrust violation is a misdemeanor that is punishable by a fine of up to $20,000 for natural persons or $50,000 for organizations. The limit on fines will increase to $1,000,000 and $50,000,000 for persons and organization, respectively. House Bill 130 is in response to a national movement to require fire sprinkler systems in one and two family dwellings. This legislation would require a more robust public process to be followed before sprinklers can be mandated in new one and two-family home construction. House Bill 155 calls for an increase to the dollar threshold that public works contracts must meet before they qualify for prevailing wages. Currently, Alaska's Little Davis-Bacon Act applies to public construction contracts over $2,000. This legislation raises the threshold to $25,000. All of the bills signed take effect October 21.

Crooked Creek recovers

The village of Crooked Creek suffered major damage during this spring's river break-up and is now receiving assistance to restore the community to a pre-disaster condition. The Crooked Creek Disaster Housing Task Force meets regularly to manage funding options, adequate construction design, shipping schedules, proper land usage, volunteer labor, donations management, and construction timelines. The task force is led by the Division of Homeland Security and Emergency Management to begin home-construction prior to winter.

Governor Parnell declared a state disaster, which activated the State's Individual Assistance Program to address the needs of Crooked Creek and Red Devil residents who suffered damages to their homes and personal property. In addition, a Federal Public Assistance Disaster Declaration enables FEMA to fund 75 percent of the disaster costs for repairs to eligible public infrastructure damaged during the flood event. The remaining 25 percent is funded by the State. Volunteer teams to build up the new homes are slated to arrive in mid-August.

Kitesurfers trying to cross Bering Strait

Two Swiss and one Austrian kiteboarder are currently holed up in Teller to wait for the right conditions for their attempt to kite from Alaska across the Bering Strait to Russia. The brothers Geza and Andre Scholz and Austrian Constantin Bisanz tried the crossing last year but had to call off their expedition due to unfavorable weather. They arrived in Nome and went on to Teller. They are accompanied by a crew of eight, including a cameraman and a journalist and two inflatable high-tech specially designed "Searibs" boats shipped to Alaska from Portugal. The three kiteboarders almost crossed paths with two Russians who were kiteboarding from Russia to the village of Wales in early July.

Abatement

• 404 West Second Ave. open in the back, child-accessible.

Some of the addresses are approximate, as the ordinance requiring all houses to be numbered has not been enforced.

Gary Hart, member of the public attending the meeting, noted that there are a good number of buildings not on the abatement list that should be.

"How does something get on the list? It depends on who owns it?"he asked, and cited some examples, including a building at Seppala Drive and D Street, not on the list.

We could add them, no let's not, let's, went a brief Council debate. Councilman Jerald Brown called a halt, saying he thought the City should work on the list of 11, then get onto a new batch of derelict structures.

The Council was to meet in regular session Wednesday, July 27, where an agenda item would be setting the hearing date for the abatement list. The City wants the abated buildings to disappear or get spiffed up before the snows fall, Josie Bahnke, city manager, said. The process should take as few as 30 days from the public hearing to be final, she said.

However, considering that some of the buildings have been on the list for several years with no result, such a short span to success is not likely. London Bridge is not currently on the market.

Alaska's tribes support Begich legislation

By Ralph Andersen

I object to the comments by David Harrison, Executive Director of Alaska Inter-Tribal Council, in the July 16 news article "Begich pitches village peace officer program" in the Fairbanks Daily News-Miner. The Bristol Bay Native Association, Kawerak, the Tanana Chiefs Conference, and the Alaska Federation of Natives worked closely with Senator Mark Begich and his staff in drafting the proposed bill.

Harrison accuses Senator Begich's proposed Alaska Safe Families and Villages Act as a "veiled attempt to further the genocidal practices of the United States of America and the State of Alaska against Alaska indigenous peoples." This statement shows he does not have the vaguest idea of what the proposed bill would actually do. It is not genocide to empower tribes and tribal courts to take responsibility for helping to stop domestic violence, alcohol and drug abuse, and suicides. It is not genocide to increase public safety in our rural villages. His accusation demonstrates his ignorance. My advice to him: Read the bill.

I am Alaska Native. I grew up in Clarks Point, a small remote village in Bristol Bay. I am not sure if David Harrison is an Alaska Native. I am not sure if he is even remotely familiar with village life. I personally helped draft the proposed legislation. I know he didn't. I am deeply insulted that he is accusing me of practicing genocide against my own people and other Alaska Natives. Terrible mistakes have been made in the past, but we can't change history.

We can't un-ring the bell. Improving and saving lives and living conditions allow us to move ahead.

For too long law enforcement in rural Alaska has been non-existent or under-funded. The Alaska Court system does not reach out far enough or fast enough for many of our remote, isolated villages. For too long, village residents have had to travel great distances at great expense for court cases. For too long we have seen bootleggers and domestic violence and sexual abuse offenders walking our village streets unabated because State law enforcement is slow to respond or the judicial system is inaccessible. As a result, our villages now experience overwhelmingly high rates of illegal drug and alcohol abuse, sexual assault, domestic violence, and suicide.

AFN, BBNA, Kawerak, and TCC, with support from tribes and tribal consortiums throughout Alaska, said enough is enough. We approached Senator Begich about the need to improve the quality of life and conditions in rural Alaska. We were honored that he invited us to help draft the bill. We also met with former Attorney General Dan Sullivan when we were drafting our proposal. We discussed it with him and the Governor's Rural Task Force. We continued and will continue to coordinate with the State throughout the process

Senator Begich was and remains willing to roll up his sleeves at our request to help us identify locallycontrolled, culturally-relevant practices and opportunities that may result in lasting change in some of our most remote and neediest villages. We don't want to take over responsibility for criminal courts, jails, and law enforcement. We simply want to do our share, to do what we can to help. We share the motivation to save villages, to save families, and to save lives — the direct opposite of what David Harrison is accusing us of doing

posal will establish Pilot Projects for tribal courts and law enforcement in our villages. It will open a new federal funding stream and opportunities for Alaska tribes that empower villages to strengthen or establish tribal courts, tribal ordinances, and to impose sanctions on violators of tribal ordinances and increase public safety. Villages selected for the Pilot Project will not suddenly have more village cops and powerful courts. The proposed bill establishes a careful step-by-step process.

It would all begin with applications from tribes to participate in the Pilot Project. If accepted, the next step is important training on ordinance preparation and enforcement, and capacity building for tribal judges and tribal court systems. Participants would also be eligible for a Village Peace Officer grant, ensuring a law enforcement presence in villages. The U.S. Department of Justice and the State Attorney General will provide oversight of the entire process.

I have great respect for Village Public Safety Officers and the gradual growth of the State's VPSO Program. But funding needs, lack of housing, equipment needs, and other factors have placed limitations. I have also witnessed first-hand the largely unchanged social problems in many villages that have existed since my childhood days. We still hear of family violence, bootlegging, and sexual abuse. It seems not a week goes by when we hear of another suicide or death.

There is no single solution to these difficult problems nor are there any easy answers. Finding the right solutions varies from region to region, community to community, and involve more than just one agency and more than just one program. For example, many regions – including Bristol Bay – have taken responsibility for finding the right answers and have established community wellness and substance abuse prevention programs. The Alaska Federation of Natives has set Senator Begich's proposed legislation as one of its priorities because it offers solutions.

The Governor set alcohol and drug abuse prevention as one of the top priorities of his administration. It seems to me that he would support this legislation as helping to solve the difficult problems rather than finding reasons why it should not move forward.

Our village residents and tribes deserve more than political rhetoric. Senator Begich's and our efforts to save villages, to save families, and to save lives deserve more than unsubstantiated accusations and insults.

The realities of village survival, the need for our families and children to feel safe at home, and public safety concerns in our villages are too great. We've identified the problems and have argued enough. It's time for action to solve them and Senator Begich's proposal is a step in the right direction.

in education and teaching from the University of Alaska, Fairbanks. "I decided very early not to teach but to work in various forms of administration for the past 20 plus years," Agloinga said.

Feeling like he's related to at least three quarters of the people in this region gives him a sense of dedication and commitment to the people and their health care needs. Working at the University of Washington, Agloinga helped the university's medical center to promote their programs and to build support for funding.

A decisive moment in time came for Agloinga when he returned to White Mountain to care for his ailing father and the Native Village appointed him their representative to the NSHC board. "Being on the board, from 2003 until 2005, was pivotal in really learning about the details of health care and funding and the issues in this region and how it's so important for this board to set policy that supports all the initiatives of improving health care in the region," Agloinga said. He adds that he received great mentoring from board chair Emily Hughes and then-CEO and president Joe Cladohous.

With a brand new hospital being built, new leadership sought and the board being in the beginning stages of formulating a new five-year strategic plan, the term "transition" is looming large in NSHC conversations

Agloinga said that despite the scare of federal budget uncertainties, the Indian Health Services budget is looking stable. "They didn't get as much money as they were hoping for but they didn't get cut as badly as they could have," said Agloinga. He said that NSHC is in a good position to maintain services and operate at full-steam while the corporation is in good financial standing.

Construction of the new hospital is on schedule and the move into the new facility is planned for November 2012.

Agloinga said while he's acting president and CEO his goal is to maintain stability during a time of change. "My goal during this time is to continue providing quality patient care and to make sure that the transition doesn't impact patient care or the quality of care or the support of our providers that provide that care," he said.

Challenges to be faced are of temporary nature, like upgrading information services in the current building. But there are also challenges that always seem to persist: how to fill positions. "We need more providers," Agloinga said. "We have quite a few open positions and it can be very hard to find people who are qualified, who want to move to Nome, to live here and put down their roots and make their commitment to the community," he said. On a bright and sunny midsummer day, this doesn't seem to be hard, yet, he said, come winter with -60°F, it's a whole different matter

Agloinga however has not thrown his hat in the ring with other applicants for the permanent leadership role. "I have not," he said. "I enjoy being in the COO position, it's the work I love."

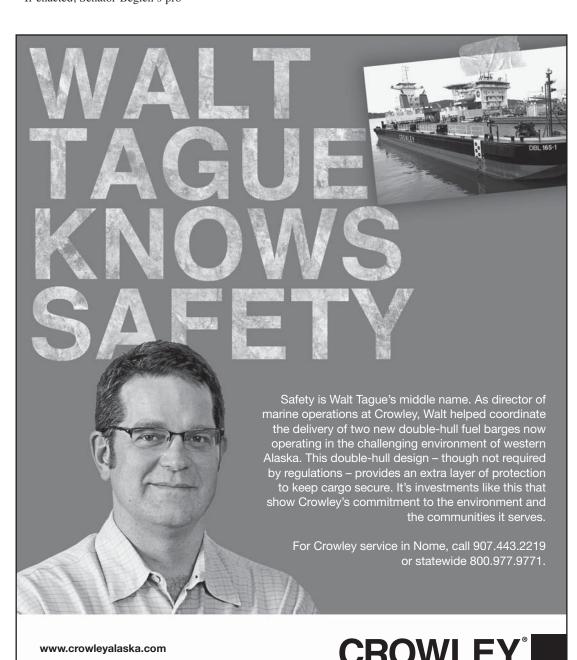

He said his main focus in this transition time is to support the staff so they can do the work that they are supposed to do. "My management style is one where I bring that support to the table first and foremost and to really look at the end product which is the services that we provide to our patients and how that is enhanced or impacted." Agloinga said.

hanced or impacted," Agloinga said. Softspoken, Agloinga that he keeps his bearings by remembering his roots. "When I think about who I am, I always feel like I'm someone from White Mountain and I'm a member of my family. That point of reference to our place and the point of reference to our people is always something that reminds me who I am. That's my touchstone in the world."

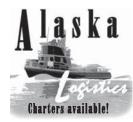

During his leadership time, Agloinga wants the patients and the people in the region to know that NSHC is functioning very well. "I want them to know that we currently have the right people in place to make the most of that transition and to help NSHC with the leadership that is needed to help turn that corner and to provide the kind of health care that we want to provide in that new hospital."

High water delays salmon escapement counting

High water knocked out a number of Norton Sound escapement projects last week for periods ranging from hours to days during which no salmon were counted, reports Jim Menard, area manager for Norton Sound and Kotzebue, Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game. The projects were the North River tower, Unalakleet River floating weir, Inglutalik River tower, Niukluk River tower, Eldorado River weir and Pilgrim River weir. Following are highlights from Menard's weekly fisheries update.

The commercial salmon catch for Norton Sound through July 23 totaled 116 kings, 205 sockeye, 85,389 chums, 5,181 pinks and 977 silvers. The chum harvest totals by subdistrict were Unalakleet, 23,591; Shaktoolik, 15,453; Norton Bay, 2,951; Elim, 23,430; and Golovin, 19,964.

The commercial chum catch is trailing last year's harvest but is on track to be the second best in more than 20 years. When silver catches exceed chum catches, the department will switch to silver salmon management.

Sockeye salmon escapement at the Pilgrim River weir increased sharply last week to a cumulative total of 6,251 fish, compared to a total of 2,892 sockeye reported a week earlier. The escapement goal at the weir is 4,000-8,000 sockeye. The lower Kuzitrin River from the mouth to 300 yards upstream of the confluence with Pilgrim River, and the Pilgrim River have been closed to all net fishing to protect sockeye migrating to Salmon Lake.

Last week's calmer seas enabled red king crab fishermen to run their gear a couple times, and they delivered large catches of crab. Approximately 204,000 pounds of crab have been delivered in the open access fishery, and about 127,000 pounds are remaining on the 2011 quota. If the harvest continues at last week's rate, the quota is projected to be reached in the second week of August. Twenty-six crabbers are registered for the open access fishery.

Kotzebue district

The first two weeks of commercial fishing have produced the best chum salmon harvest since the mid-1990s. The number of permit holders who are participating in the fishery has increased this year. The cumulative catch through July 23 was 68,000 chums. The biggest fishing weeks in terms of effort and catch are the last week of July and the first week of August.

Unalakleet teen drowns

By Diana Haecker

On Friday evening, Christopher Lockwood, 17, drowned in the Unalak-leet River. According to Alaska State Trooper spokeswoman Megan Peters, he tried to swim across the river with a friend. She said that they were going to retrieve a water toy on the far shore. His friend made it across the river, but Lockwood made it only halfway and was caught in the current. Peters said, the teen began to struggle and went under.

An elderly woman saw what happened and tried to get to him in a boat, but didn't make it in time. Lockwood's body was recovered from the water about 25 minutes later. He was taken to the Unalakleet clinic and declared deceased.

Troopers say the investigation is ongoing.

FAA partial shutdown does not affect construction projects in the region

By Diana Haecker

At the stroke of midnight last Friday, the Federal Aviation Administration began a partial shutdown as the Republican-controlled U.S. House of Representatives did not extend the agency's reauthorization and its funding. The FAA still provides essential safety and air control services.

Max Croes, deputy press secretary for US Senator Mark Begich, told The Nome Nugget that the House and Senate each passed a separate reauthorization bill earlier this year, but that negotiations have not taken place to come up with final legislation. The FAA reauthorization expired in 2007, but since then Congress passed 20 extensions to keep the agency funded and going.

According to political pundits, the sticking point that prevented the 21st extension was a ruling by the National Mediation Board that made it easier for the airline and railroad workers to unionize. The FAA reauthorization bill passed by the House in April included a provision that would overturn the board's ruling.
